DICTIONARY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Vol 2.

L A liquid conſonant, which preſerves always the ſame ſound in Engliſh. In the Saxon it was aſpirated, as, hlaf, loaf; hlafdig, lady.

At the end of a monoſyllable it is always doubled; as, ſhall, ſtill, full; except after a diphthong; as, jail, feel, veal, cool. In a word of more ſyllables it is written ſingle; as, channel, canal, tendril. It is ſometimes put before e, and ſounded feebly after it; as, bible, title.

LA. interject. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo; unleſs it be the French la.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you ſpeak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart. Shakſ. Twelfth Night.

LA'BDANUM. n. ſ. A reſin, of a ſtrong not unpleaſant ſmell, and an aromatick, but not agreeable taſte. This juice exudates from a low ſpreading ſhrub in Crete. Hill.

To LA'BEFY. v. a. [labefacio, Lat.] To weaken; to impair. Dict.

LA'BEL. n. ſ. [labellum, Latin.]

1. A ſmall ſlip or ſcrip of writing.

When wak'd, I found
This label on my boſom; whoſe containing
Is ſo from ſenſe in hardneſs, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakſpeare's Cymbeline.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.

On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impreſſed from the papal ſeal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In law.] A narrow ſlip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending ſeal. So alſo any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or teſtament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo ſeal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this ſhall ſlay them both. Shakſ.

LA'BENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; ſlipping. Dict.

LA'BIAL. adj. [labialis, Lat.] Uttered by the lips.

The Hebrews have aſſigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

Some particular affection of ſound in its paſſage to the lips, will ſeem to make ſome compoſition in any vowel which is labial. Holder.

LA'BIODENTAL. adj. [labium and dentalis.] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

The dental conſonants are very eaſy; and firſt the labiodentals, f, v, alſo the linguadentals, t h, d h. Holder.

LABO'RANT. n. ſ. [laborans, Lat.] A chymiſt. Not in uſe.

LA'BORATORY. n. ſ. [laboratoire, French.] A chymiſt's workroom.

It would contribute to the hiſtory of colours, if chemiſts would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours obſerved in the ſteam of bodies, either ſublimed or diſtilled. Boyle.

The flames of love will perform thoſe miracles they of the furnace boaſt of, would they employ themſelves in this laboratory. Decay of Piety.

LABO'RIOUS. adj. [laboricux, French; laboriojus, Lat.]

1. Aſſiduous in work; aſſiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their profeſſions, unſpotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and reſolute in oppoſing ſeducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and, laſtly, to be gentle, courteous, and compaſſionate to all. South.

A ſpacious cave within its ſtarmoſt part,
Was hew'd and faſhion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow ſides. Dryden.

To his laborious youth conſum'd in war,
And laſting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace. Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tireſome; not eaſy.

Do'ſt thou love watchings, abſtinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all? learn them from Cato. Add.

LABO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.] With labour; with toil.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriouſly in a ſhip, yet neglects to ſtop the leak. Dec. of Piety.

I chuſe laboriouſly to bear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABO'RIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from laborious.]

1. Toilſomeneſs; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gain'eſſneſs, as well as the laborioujneſs of the work; thoſe wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkneſs, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the infatiate miſer. Decay of Piety.

2. Diligence; aſſidnity.

LA'BOUR. n. ſ. [labeur, Fr. labor, Lat.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of ſtrength, or wearifome perſeverance; pains; toil; travail; work.

If I find her honeſt, I loſe not my labour; if ſhe be otherwiſe, it is labour well beſtowed. Shakſ.

I ſent to know your faith, leſt the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Theſſ.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of ſo great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wiſh than look for. Hooker.

If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and ſav'd
Your huſband ſo much ſweat. Shakſpeare.

3. Work done; performance.

4. Exerciſe; motion with ſome degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preſervation of health, and curing many initial diſeaſes; but the toil of the mind deſtroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

5. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of womens labours thou haſt charge,
And generation goodly doeſt enlarge,
Incline thy will to effect our wiſhful vow. Spenſer.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of ſudden ſhootings, and of grinding pain;
My throws come thicker, and my cries encreas'd,
Which with her hand the conſcious nurſe ſuppreſs'd. Dryden.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Graunt.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs 'till it be delivered. South's Serm.

To LA'BOUR. v. n. [laboro, Latin.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When ſhall I come to th' top of that ſame hill?
—You do climb up it now; look how we labour. Shakſpeare.

For your higheſs' good I ever labour'd,
More than mine own. Shakſpeare.

Who is with him?
—None but the fool, who labours to out-jeſt
His heart-ſtruck injuries. Shakſpeare's K. Lear.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Exod.

He is ſo touch'd with the memory of her beau-violence and protection, that his foul labours for an expression to represent it. Notes on the Odyssey.

Epaphras saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that we may stand perfect. Colos.

2. To do work; to take pains.

The matter of the ceremonies had wrought, for the most part, only upon light-headed, weak men, whose satisfaction was not to be laboured for. Clarendon.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness, shall not be rich. Ecclus.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day. Nehemiah.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. Locke.

3. To move with difficulty.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning still,
Is love. Glanville.

4. To be diseased with. [morbo laborare, Latin.] Not in use.

They abound with horse,
Of which one want our camp doth only labour.
B. Jonson.

I was called to another, who in childbed laboured of an ulcer in her left hip. Wiseman.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.

To this infernal lake the fury flies,
Here hides her hated head, and frees the lab'ring skies Dryden.

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,
As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon. Dryd.

Thus exercise will call down the favour of Heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you. Wake's Preparation for Death.

6. To be in childbirth; to be in travail.

There lay a log unlighted on the earth,
When she was labouring in the throws of birth;
For th' unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and tos'd it on the flame. Dryd.

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring god. Pope.

To LA'BOUR. v. a.

1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to form with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgment. 2 Maccabees.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand,
Th' artificer and art you might command,
To labour arms for Troy. Dryden's Æneid.

An eager desire to know something concerning him, has accustomed mankind to labour the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information. Pope.

To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryd.

LA'BOURER. n. s. [labourer, French.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their workfolks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.

The sun but seem'd the lab'rer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,
To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brimful vessels to the Belgian shore. Dryd.

Labourers and idle persons, children and cripples, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbuthnot.

Not balmy sleep to lab'rers faint with pain,
Nor show'rs to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,
Are half so charming, as thy sight to me. Pope.

Yet hence the poor are clothed, the hungry fed,
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears. Pope.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee. Swift.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness. Shakspeare.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning still,
Is love. Glanville.

LA'BOURSOME. adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence. Not in use.

Forget
Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Jove angry. Shakspeare. Cymbeline.

He hath, my lord, by laboursome petition,
Wrung from me my slow leave. Shakspeare. Hamlet.

LA'BRA. n. s. [Spanish.] A lip. Not used. Hanmer.

Word of denial in thy labras here;
Word of denial, froward lesson thou hast. Shak.

LA'BYRINTH. n. s. [labyrinthus, Latin.] A maze; a place formed with inextricable windings.

Suffolk, stay;
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There minotaurs and ugly treasons lurk. Shakspeare.

Words, which would tear
The tender labyrinth of a maid's soft ear. Donne.

My clamours tear
The ear's soft labyrinth, and cleft the air. Sandys.

The earl of Essex had not proceeded with his accustomed wariness and skill; but run into labyrinths, from whence he could not disentangle himself. Clarendon.

My soul is on her journey; do not now
Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself
I' th' maze and winding labyrinths o' th' world.
Denham.

LAC. n. s.

Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable, and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree. 1. The stick lac. 2. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom. Hill.

LACE. n. s. [lacet, French; laqueus, Lat.]

1. A string; a cord.

There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free thereout; but all in vain:
For striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twain
In limy snares, the subtil loops among. Spenser.

2. A snare; a gin.

The king had marred been in love's strong lace.
Fairfax.

3. A plaited string, with which women fasten their clothes.

O! cut my lace, lest, my heart cracking, it

Doll ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face Swift.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.

Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces; and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem. Bacon.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.

He wears a stuff, whose thread is coarse and round,
But trimm'd with curious lace. Herbert.

6. Sugar. A cant word, now out of use.

If haply he the feet pursues,
That read and comment upon news;
He takes up their mysterious face,
He drinks his coffee without lace. Prior.

To LACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a string run through eyelet holes.

I caused a fomentation to be made, and put on a laced sock, by which the weak parts were strengthened. Wiseman.

At this, for new replies he did not stay,
But lac'd his crested helm, and strode away. Dryd.

These glitt'ring spoils, now made the victor's gain,
He to his body suits, but suits in vain;
Mesthpus' helm he finds among the rest,
And laces on, and wears the waving crest. Dryd.

Like Mrs. Primly's great belly; she may lace it down before, but it burnishes on her hips. Congreve.

When Jenny's stays are newly lac'd,
Fair Alma plays about her waist. Prior.

2. To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.

It is but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and coats, and lac'd with silver. Shakspeare.

3. To embellish with variegations.

Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder East;
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tiptoe on the misty mountains tops. Shak.

Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustic, makes a front.
Pope.

4. To beat; whether from the form which L'Estrange uses, or by corruption of lash.

Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye. L'Estr.

LACED Mutton. An old word for a whore.

Ay, Sir, I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her a lac'd mutton, and she gave me nothing for my labour. Shakspeare.

LA'CEMAN. n. s. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.

I met with a nonjuror, engaged with a laceman, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Cæsar, or Nero. Addison's Spectator.

LA'CERABLE. adj. [from lacerate.] Such as may be torn.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily be open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable composure. Harvey.

To LA'CERATE. v. n. [lacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.

And my sons lacerate and rip up, viper-like, the womb that brought them forth. Howel.

The heat breaks through the water, so as to lacerate and lift up great bubbles too heavy for the air to buoy up, and causeth boiling. Denham.

Here lacerated friendship claims a tear.
Vanity of Human Wishes.

LACERA'TION. n. s. [from lacerate.] The act of tearing or rending; the breach made by tearing.

The effects are, extension of the great vessels, compression of the lesser, and lacerations upon small causes. Arbuthnot.

LA'CERATIVE. adj. [from lacerate.] Tearing; having the power to tear.

Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual influx of lacerative humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

LA'CHRYMAL. adj. [lachrymal, French.] Generating tears.

It is of an exquisite sense, that, upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it. Cheyne.

LA'CHRYMARY. adj. [lachryma, Latin.] Containing tears.

How many dresses are there for each particular deity? what a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, and lachrymary vessels? Addison.

LACHRYMA'TION. n. s. [from lachryma, Lat.] The act of weeping, or shedding tears.

LA'CHRYMATORY. n. s. [lachrimatoire, Fr.] A vessel in which tears are gathered to the honour of the dead.

LACI'NIATED. adj. [from lacinia, Lat.] Adorned with fringes and borders.

To LACK. v. a. [lacchen, to lessen, Dutch.] To want; to need; to be without.

Every good and holy desire, though it lack the form, hath notwithstanding in itself the substance, and with him the force, of prayer, who regardeth the very moanings, groans, and ſighs of the heart. Hooker.

A land wherein thou ſhalt eat bread without ſcarceneſs, thou ſhalt not lack any thing in it. Deut.

One dry we hope thou ſhalt bring back,
Dear Bolingbroke, the juſtice that we lack. Daniel
Intreat they may; authority they lack. Daniel

To LACK. v. n.

1. To be in want.

The lions do lack and ſuffer hunger. Com. Prayer.

2. To be wanting.

Peradventure there ſhall lack five of the fifty righteous, wilt thou deſtroy all the city for lack of five? Geneſis

There was nothing lacking to them; David recovered all. 1 Samuel.

That which was lacking on your part, they have ſupplied. 1 Corinthians.

LACK. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Want; need; failure.

In the Scripture there neither wanteth any thing, the lack whereof might deprive us of life. Hooker.

Many that are not mad
Have ſure more lack of reaſon. Shakſpeare.

He was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knolles.

The trenchant blade, toledo truſty,
For want of fighting was grown ruſty,
And eat into itſelf, for lack
Of ſomebody to hew and hack. Hudibras.

LA'CKBRAIN. n. ſ. [lack and brain.] One that wants wit.

What a lackbrain is this? Our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid. Shakſpeare.

LA'CKER. n. ſ. A kind of varniſh, which, ſpread upon a white ſubſtance, exhibits a gold colour.

To LA'CKER. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſmear over with lacker.

What ſhook the ſtage, and made the people ſtare?
Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair. Pope.

LA'CKEY. n. ſ. [laquais, Fr.] An attending ſervant; a footboy.

They would ſhame to make me
Wait elſe at door: a fellow counſellor,
'Mong boys, and grooms, and lackeys! Shakſ.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He's cautious to avoid the coach and ſix,
And on the lackeys will no quarrel fix. Dryden.

Laquays were never ſo ſaucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days. Addiſon's Spectator.

To LA'CKEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend ſervilely. I know not whether Milton has uſed this word very properly.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the ſtream,
Goes to, and back, lackeying the varying tide,
To rot itſelf with motion. Shakſpeare.

So dear to heav'n is ſaintly chaſtity,
That when a ſoul is found ſincerely ſo,
A thouſand liveried angels lackey her,
Driving far off each thing of ſin and guilt. Milton.

To LA'CKEY. v. n. To act as a footboy; to pay ſervile attendance.

Oft have I ſervants ſeen on horſes ride,
The free and noble lacquey by their ſide. Sandys.

Our Italian tranſlator of the Æneis is a foot poet, he lackeys by the ſide of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryden.

LA'CKLINEN. adj. [lack and linen.] Wanting ſhirts.

You poor, baſe, raſcally, cheating, lacklinen mate, away, you mouldy rogue, away. Shakſ.

LA'CKLUSTRE. adj. [lack and luſtre.] Wanting brightneſs.

And then he drew a dial from his poke,
And looking on it with lacklutre eye,
Says very wiſely, It is ten o'clock. Shakſpeare.

LACO'NICK. adj. [laconicus, Lat. laconique, Fr.] Short, brief; from Laconea, the Spartans, who uſed few words.

I grow laconick even beyond laconiciſm; for ſometimes I return only yes, or no, to queſtionary or petitionary epiſtles of half a yard long. Pope.

LA'CONISM. n. ſ. [laconiſme, Fr. laconiſmus, Lat.] A conciſe ſtyle: called by Pope, laconiciſm. See LACONICK.

As the language of the face is univerſal, ſo it is very comprehenſive: no laconiſm can reach it. It is the ſhort hand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. Collier of the Aſpect.

LACO'NICALLY. adv. [from laconick.] Briefly; conciſely.

Alexander Nequam, a man of great learning, and deſirous to enter into religion there, writ to the abbot laconically. Camden's Remains.

LA'CTEAL. adj. [from lac, Lat.] Milky; conveying chyle of the colour of milk.

As the food paſſes, the chyle, which is the nutritive part, is ſeparated from the excrementitious by the lacteal veins; and from thence conveyed into the blood. Locke.

LA'CTEAL. n. ſ. The veſſel that conveys chyle.

The mouths of the lacteals may permit aliment, acrimonious or not ſufficiently attenuated, to enter in people of lax conſtitutions, whereas their ſphincters will ſhut againſt them in ſuch as have ſtrong fibres. Arbuthnot.

LACTE'OUS. adj. [lacteus, Lat.]

1. Milky.

Though we leave out the lacteous circle, yet are there more by four than Philo mentions. Brown.

2. Lacteal; conveying chyle.

The lungs are ſuitable for reſpiration, and the lacteous veſſels for the reception of the chyle. Bentley.

LACTE'SCENCE. n. ſ. [lacteſco, Lat.] Tendency to milk, or milky colour.

This lacteſcence does commonly enſue, when wine, being impregnated with gums, or other vegetable concretions, that abound with ſulphureous corpuſcles, fair water is ſuddenly poured upon the ſolution. Boyle on Colours.

LACTE'SCENT. adj. [lacteſcens, Lat.] Producing milk, or a white juice.

Amongſt the pot-herbs are ſome lacteſcent plants, as lettuce and endive, which contain a wholeſome juice. Arbuthnot.

LACTI'FEROUS. adj. [lac and fero, Lat.] What conveys or brings milk.

He makes the breaſts to be nothing but glandules, made up of an infinite number of little knots, each whereof hath its excretory veſſel, or lactiferous duct. Ray on the Creation.

LAD. n. ſ. [leobe, Saxon, which commonly ſignifies people, but ſometimes, ſays Mr. Lye, a boy.]

1. A boy; a ſtripling, in familiar language.

We were
Two lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But ſuch a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal. Shakſpeare.

The poor lad who wants knowledge muſt ſet his invention on the rack, to ſay ſomething where he knows nothing. Locke.

Too far from the ancient ſo ms of teaching ſeveral good grammarians have departed, to the great detriment of ſuch lads as have been removed to other ſchools. Watts.

2. A boy; a young man, in paſtoral language.

For grief whereof the lad would after joy,
But pin'd away in anguiſh, and ſelf-will'd annoy. Spenſer.

The ſhepherd lad,
Whoſe offspring on the throne of Judah ſat
So many ages. Milton.

LA'DDER. n. ſ. [hlabne, Saxon.]

1. A frame made with ſteps placed between two upright pieces.

Whoſe compoſt is rotten, and carried in time,
And ſpread as it ſhould be, thatch's ladder may climb. Tuſſer.

Now ſtreets grow throng'd, and buſy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire,
Some cut the pipes, and ſome the engines play,
And ſome more bold mount ladder to the fire
Dryden.

Eaſy in words thy ſtyle, in ſenſe ſublime,
'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream,
Its foot on earth, its height above the ſkies. Prior.

I ſaw a ſtage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants, with two or three ladders to mount it. Gulliver's Travels.

2. Any thing by which one climbs.

1. To waſh; to bathe.

Unsafe, that we must love our honours
In these so flatt'ring streams. Shakesp. Macbeth.
But as I rose out of the laving stream,
Heav'n open'd her eternal doors, from whence
The spirit descended on me like a dove. Milton.
With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Whose low-laid mouths each mounting billow laves,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length,
She seems a sea-wasp flying on the waves. Dryden.

2. [lever, Fr.] To throw up; to lade; to draw out.

Though hills were set on hills,
And seas met seas to guard thee, I would through:
I'd plough up rocks, steep as the Alps, in dust,
And lave the Tyrrhene waters into clouds,
But I would reach thy head. Ben Johnson.
Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides,
Another bolder yet the yard bestrides,
And folds the sails; a fourth with labour laves
Th' intruding seas, and waves eject on waves.

Must be at once resolv'd, and skilful too. Dryden.

LA'VENDER. n. s. [lavendula, Latin.] A plant.

It is one of the verticillate plants, whose flower consists of one leaf, divided into two lips; the upper lip, standing upright, is roundish, and, for the most part, bifid; but the under lip is cut into three segments, which are almost equal: these flowers are disposed in whorles, and are collected into a slender spike upon the top of the stalks. Miller.

The whole lavender plant has a highly aromatick smell and taste, and is famous as a cephalick, nervous, and uterine medicine. Hill.

And then again he turneth to his play,
To spoil the pleasures of that paradise:
The wholesome sage, and lavender still grey,
Rank smelling rue, and cummin good for eyes.
Spenser.

LA'VER. n. s. [lavoir, French; from lave.] A washing vessel.

Let us go find the body where it lies
Soak'd in his enemies' blood, and from the stream
With laves pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off
The clodded gore. Milton's Agonistes.
He gave her to his daughters, to imbathe
In nectar'd laves brew'd with asphodil. Milton.
Young Arctus from forth his bridal bow'r
Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour.
Pope's Odyssey.

To LAUGH. v. n. [hlahan, Saxon; lachen, German and Dutch; lach, Scottish.]

1. To make that noise which sudden merriment excites.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.
Shakspeare.
There's one did laugh in's sleep, and one cried
Murther!
They wak'd each other. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.

Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well; the world may laugh again,
And I may live to do you kindness, if
You do it her. Shakspeare's Henry VI.
Then laughs the childish year with flowrets crown'd. Dryden.
The plenteous board, high-heap'd with cates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine.
Pope.

3. To LAUGH at. To treat with contempt; to ridicule.

Presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat
Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in thee at others lives may laugh.
Shakspeare.
'Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council; you'll be laughed at. Shakspeare.
The dissolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find that they are merry at their own expence. Addison.
No wit to flatter left of all his store;
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

To LAUGH. v. a. To deride; to scorn.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
A wicked soul shall make him to be laughed to scorn of his enemies. Ecclesiasticus.

LAUGH. n. s. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

LA'UGHABLE. adj. [from laugh.] Such as may properly excite laughter.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peep through their eye,
And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper;
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable. Shakspeare.
Cathubon confesses Persius was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer. Dryden.

LA'UGHER. n. s. [from laugh.] A man fond of merriment.

We find not that the laughter-loving dame
Mourn'd for Anchises. Waller.
Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.

LA'VISH. adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology. It may be plausibly derived from to lave, to throw out; as profundere opes, is to be lavish.]

1. Prodigal; wasteful; indiscreetly liberal.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles, in his own defence. Dry.
The dame has been too lavish of her feast,
And fed him till he loaths. Rowe's Jane Shore.

2. Scattered in waste; profuse: as, the cost was lavish.

3. Wild; unrestrained.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him, curbing his lavish spirit. Shak.

To LA'VISH. v. a. [from the adjective.] To scatter with profusion; to waste; to squander.

Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not th' impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands?
Addison.

LA'VISHER. n. s. [from lavish.] A prodigal; a profuse man.

LA'VISHLY. adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.

My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority. Shak. Hen. IV.
Then laughs the childish year with flowrets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.
Praise to a wit is like rain to a tender flower; if it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives; but if too lavishly, overcharges and depresses him. Pope.

LA'VISHMENT. } n. s. [from lavish.]
LA'VISHNESS. } Prodigality; profusion.

First got with guile, and then preserv'd with dread,
And after spent with pride and lavishness. F. Queen.

To LAUNCH. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lance, because a ship is pushed into water with great force.]

1. To force a vessel into the sea.

Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. Luke.
So short a stay prevails;
He soons equips the ships, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch. Dryden.
For general history, Raleigh and Howel are to be had. He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whear. Locke.

2. To rove at large; to expatiate; to make excursions.

From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind. Dav.
Whoever purfues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.
Spenser has not contented himself with submissive imitation: he launches out into very flowery paths, which still conduct him into one great road. Prior.
He had not acted in the character of a supplicant, if he had launched out into a long oration. Broome.
I have launched out of my subject on this article. Arbuthnot.

To LAUNCH. v. a.

1. To push to sea.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England. King Charles.
With stays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And roll'd on leavers, launch'd her in the deep.
Pope.

2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better written lanch or lance.

The king of Heav'n, obscure on high,
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His writhen bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep aby's the flaming fellow strook.
Dryden.

LAUND. n. s. [lande, French; llan, Welsh.] Lawn; a plain extended between woods. Hanmer.

Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves;
For through this launa anon the deer will come;
And in this covert will we make our stand. Shak.

LA'UNDRESS. n. s. [lavandiere, French: Skinner imagines that lavandaresse may have been the old word.] A woman whose employment is to wash clothes.

The countess of Richmond would often say, On condition the princes of Christendom would march against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their laundress. Camden.
Take up these cloaths here quickly; carry them to the laundress in Datchet Mead. Shakspeare.
The laundress must be sure to tear her smocks in the washing, and yet wash them but half. Swift.

LA'UNDRY. n. f. [as if lavanderie.]

LEAD. n. ſ. [læd, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heavieſt metal except gold and quickſilver. Lead is the ſofteſt of all the metals, and very ductile, though leſs ſo than gold: it is very little ſubject to ruſt, and the leaſt ſonorous of all the metals except gold. The ſpecifick gravity of lead is to that of water as 11,322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fuſion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baſer metals, and carries them off, in form of ſcoriæ, to the ſides of the veſſel. The weakeſt acids are the beſt ſolvents for lead: it diſſolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as alſo in vinegar. The ſmoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and ſubjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal diſeaſe. Hill.

Thou art a ſoul in bliſs, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do ſcald like molten lead. Shakſpeare.

Of lead, ſome I can ſhew you ſo like ſteel, and ſo unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it ſteel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and ſilver by the cupel; hereof is made common ceruſs with vinegar; of ceruſs, red lead; of plumbum uſtum, the beſt yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, ſolder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on; becauſe houſes are covered with lead.

Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are ſmother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earneſtneſs to ſee him. Shakſpeare.

I would have the tower two ſtories, and goodly leads upon the top, raiſed with ſtatues interpoſed. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with lead in any manner.

He faſhioneth the clay with his arm, he applieth himſelf to lead it over; and he is diligent to make clean the furnace. Eccleſiaſticus.

There is a traverſe placed in a loft, at the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glaſs leaded with gold and blue, where the mother ſits. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. preter. I led; part. led. [laban, Saxon; leiden, Dutch.]

1. To guide by the hand.

There is a cliff, whoſe high and bending head
Looks fearfully on the confined deep:
Bring me but to the very brim of it,
And I'll repair the miſery thou doſt bear,
With ſomething rich about me: from that place
I ſhall no leading need. Shakſpeare's King Lear.

He maketh me to lie down in green paſtures; he leadeth me beſide the ſtill waters. Pſalms.

3. To conduct as head or commander.

Would you lead forth your army againſt the enemy, and ſeek him where he is to fight? Spenſ.

He turns head againſt the lion's armed jaws;
And being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads antient lords, and rev'rend biſhops; on
To bloody battles. Shakſpeare's Henry IV.

If thou wilt have
The leading of thy own revenges, take
One half of my commiſſion, and ſet down
As beſt thou art experienc'd. Shakſpeare.

He led me on to mightieſt deeds,
Above the nerve of mortal arm,
Againſt the uncircumciſ'd, our enemies:
But now hath caſt me off. Milton's Agoniſtes.

Chriſt took not upon him fleſh and blood, that he might conquer and rule nations, lead armies, or poſſeſs places. South.

Upon his ivory ſceptre firſt he leant,
Then ſhook his head, that ſhook the firmament.
Dryden.

Oppreſs'd with anguiſh, panting and o'erſpent,
His fainting limbs againſt an oak he leant. Dryd.

If God be angry, all our other dependences will profit us nothing; every other ſupport will fail under us when we come to lean upon it, and deceive us in the day when we want it moſt. Rogers.

Then leaning o'er the rail he muſing ſtood. Gay.

'Mid the central depth of black'ning woods,
High rais'd in ſolemn theatre around
Leans the huge elephant. Thomſon.

2. To propend; to tend toward.

They delight rather to lean to their old cuſtoms, though they be more unjuſt, and more inconvenient. Spenſer.

Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own underſtanding. Proverbs.

A deſire leaning to either ſide, biaſſes the judgment ſtrangely. Watts.

3. To be in a bending poſture.

She leans me out at her miſtreſs's chamber window, bids me a thouſand times good night. Shak.

Starved with length of ways, and sore with toil;
She laid her down; and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries. Dryden.
The gods came downward to behold the wars,
Stoop'ning their sights, and leaning from their stars.
Dryden.

LEAN. adj. [hlæne, Saxon.]

1. Not fat; meagre; wanting flesh; barebboned.
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire.
Shakspeare.
Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose,
They had such courage and audacity? Shakspeare.
Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change.
Shakspeare.
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave. Shakf.
Seven other kine came up out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed. Genesis.
Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation. Bacon.

Agrees not with the leanness of his purse. Shakfp.

To LEAP. v. n. [hleapan, Saxon; loup, Scottish.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.
If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakspeare's Henry v.
A mean leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon's Natural History.
In a narrow pit
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it. Cowley.
Thrice from the ground she leap'd, was seen to wield
Her brandish'd lance. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To rush with vehemence.
God changed the spirit of the king into mildness, who in a fear leaped from his throne, and took her to his arms, till she came to herself again. Esther.
After he went into the tent, and found her not, he leaped out to the people.
He ruin upon ruin heaps,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaps. Sandys.
Strait leaping from his horse, he rais'd me up.
Rowe.

3. To bound; to spring.
Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy. Luke.
I am warm'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. To fly; to start.
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. Shakfp. Henry VIII.
Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out. Job.

To LEAP. v. n.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.
Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country. L'Estrange.
As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
She dares pursue if they dare lead:
As their example still prevails,
She tempts the stream, or leaps the pales. Prior.

2. To compress, as beasts.
Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow. Dryden's Georg.

LEAP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.
After they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded? L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.
Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue; and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unnatural. L'Estrange.
The commons wrested even the power of chusing a king intirely out of the hands of the nobles; which was so great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear. Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.
The cat made a leap at the mouse. L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.
How she cheats her bellowing lover's eye;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny. Dryden.

6. Hazard, or effect of leaping.
Methinks, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon.
Shakspeare.
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakfp. Hen. VIII.
Behold that dreadful downfal of a rock,
Where you old miser views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryden.

LEAP-FROG. n. f. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.
If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakspeare's Henry v.

LEAP-YEAR. n. f.
Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more that year than in a common year: so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:
Divide by 4; what's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for past 1, 2, 3. Harris.
The reason of the name of leap-year is, that a day of the week is missed; as, if on one year the first of March be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday, but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.
That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown.

To LEARN. v. a. [leornian, Saxon.]

1. To gain knowledge or skill of.
Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Matthew.
He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knolles.
Learn, wretches! learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of human kind. Dryden.
You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition:
All he can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Philips.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.] This sense is now obsolete.
He would learn
The lion stoop to him in lowly wise,
A lesson hard. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language. Shakfp. Tempest.
A thousand more misfortunes than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shak.
Hast thou not learn'd me how
To make perfumes? Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

To LEARN. v. n. To take pattern: with of.
Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly. Matthew
In imitation of sounds, that Man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Natural History.

LE'ARNED. adj. [from learn.]

1. Versed in science and literature.
It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.
Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile.
Pope.
The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.
The best account is given of them by their own authors: but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Skilled; skilful; knowing: with in.
Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,
Thou chusest not to conquer men but hearts. Granville.

3. Skilled in scholastick, as distinct from other knowledge.
Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.

LE'ARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.
The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad. Hooker.
Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shakfp.
Every coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LE'ARNING. n. f. [from learn.]

1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastick knowledge.
Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when solid, and, lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon.
To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.
As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.
An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long sithence forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.

LE'ARNER. n. f. [from learn.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.
The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.
Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practise artist can. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

LEASE. n. s. [laisser, French. Spelman.]

1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.

Why, cousin, wer't thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shaksp.

Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Den.

I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishop's leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.

2. Any tenure.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakspeare.

Thou to give the world increase,
Short'ned hast thy own life's lease. Milton.

To LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tithes to the vicar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To LEASE. v. n. [lesen, Dutch.] To glean; to gather what the harvest men leave.

She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chare work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire. Dryden.

LE'ASER. n. s. [from lease.] Gleaner; gatherer after the reaper.

There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.

LEASH. n. s. [lesse, French; letse, Dutch; laccio, Italian.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound. Hanmer.

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakspeare.

What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leash unwillingly. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

2. A tierce; three.

I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names. Shaksp.

Some thought when he did gabble
Th'ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras.

Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis' Letters.

3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.

The ravished soul being shewn such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. Boyle.

To LEASH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to hold in a string.

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
Leasht in like hounds, should famine, sword and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shakspeare's Henry v.

LE'ASING. n. s. [leaſe, Saxon.] Lies; falsehood.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasing? Psalms.

He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell. Hubb.

He hates foul leasings and vile flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Hubberd's Tale.

That false pilgrim which that leasing told,
Was indeed old Archimago. Fairy Queen.

I have ever verified my friends
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stampt the leasing. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leasing,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lie deserted:
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.

Trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leasings lewd affright the swain. Gay.

LEAST. adj. the superlative of little. [leaſt, Saxon. This word Wallis would persuade us to write lest, that it may be analogous to less; but surely the profit is not worth the change.] Little beyond others; smallest.

2. [Sea term; fuppofed by Skinner from l'eau, French.] It is generally that fide which is oppofite to the wind, as the lee fhore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the fhore, is to be clofe under the weather fhore. A leeward fhip is one that is not faft by a wind, to make her way fo good as the might. To lay a fhip by the lee, is to bring her fo that all her fails may lie againft the mafts and fhrowds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadfide, fo that fhe will make little or no way. Dict.

If we, in the bay of Bifcay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our tranfporting fhips with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet. Raleigh.

The Hollanders were before Dunkirk with the wind at north-weft, making a lee fhore in all weathers. Raleigh.

Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to fea by a ftorm; yet better do fo than venture fplitting and finking on a lee fhore. K. Charles.

Him, haply flumb'ring on the Norway foam,
To pilot of fome fmall night-founder'd fkiff,
Deeming fome ifland, oft, as feamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his fcaly rind,
Moors by his fide under the lee, while night
Invefts the fea. Milton.

Batter'd by his lee they lay,
The paffing winds through their torn canvafs play.
Dryden.

LEECH. n. f. [læce, Saxon.]

1. A phyfician; a profeffor of the art of healing: whence we ftill ufe cowleech.

A leech, the which had great infight
In that difeafe of grieved confcience,
And well could cure the fame; his name was Patience. Spenfer's Fairy Queen.

Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech
His cunning hand 'gan his wounds to lay,
And all things elfe the which his art did teach.
Fairy Queen.

Phyfick is their bane.
The learned leeches in defpair depart,
And fhake their heads, defponding of their art.
Dryden.

Wife leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till fome fafe crifis. Dryden.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd,
Tried every health-reftoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful fkill in vain. Rowe.

A fkilful leach,
They fay, had wrought this bleffed deed;
This leach Arbuthnot was yclept. Gay's Paftorals.

2. To look with a forced countenance.

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,
To gild a face with fmiles, and leer a man to ruin.
Dryden.

LEES. n. f. [lie, French.] Dregs; fediment: it has feldom a fingular.

The memory of king Richard was fo ftrong, that it lay like lees at the bottom of men's hearts; and if the veffel was but ftirred, it would come up.
Bacon's Henry VII.

If they love lees, and leave the lufty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the fwine. B. Jon.

Th[illegible] that trouble it, refine
The agitated foul of generous wine. Dryden.

To LEESE. v. a. [lefen, Dutch.] To lofe: an old word.

Then tell to thy profit both butter and cheefe,
Who buieth it fooner the more he fhall leefe. Tuffer.

No caufe, nor client fat, will Chev'ril leefe,

You would prefent her at the leet,
Becaufe fhe bought ftone jugs, and no feal'd quarts.
Shakfpeare.

LE'EWARD. adj. [lee and peaɲb, Saxon.] Toward the wind. See LEE.

The clafficæ were called long fhips, the onerariæ round, becaufe of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the ftowage of goods, was not the fitteft for failing, becaufe of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they failed full before the wind. Arbuthnot.

Let no ftatefman dare,
A kingdom to a fhip compare;
Left he fhould call our commonweal
A veffel with a double keel;
Which juft like ours, new rigg'd and man'd
And got about a league from land,
By change of wind to leeward fide,
The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

Alas, poor lady! defolate and left;
I weep myfelf to think upon thy words. Shakfp.

LE'GACY, n. ſ. [legatum, Latin.]

Legacy is a particular thing given by laſt will and teſtament. Cowel.

If there be no ſuch thing apparent upon record, they do as if one ſhould demand a legacy by force and virtue of ſome written teſtament, wherein there being no ſuch thing ſpecified, he pleadeth that there it muſt needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the teſtator bore him; imagining, that theſe, or the like proofs, will convict a teſtament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by reading find. Hooker.

Fetch the will hither, and we ſhall determine
How to cut off ſome charge in legacies. Shakſp.

Good counſel is the beſt legacy a father can leave a child. L'Eſtrange.

When he thought you gone
T'augment the number of the bleſs'd above,
He doom'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd his brother's portions to invade,
But to defend the preſent you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vaſt treaſure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wiſely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.

Leave to thy children tumult, ſtrife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LE'GAL. adj. [legal, Fr. leges, Lat.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.

Whatſoever was before Richard I. was before time of memory; and what is ſince, is, in a legal ſenſe, within the time of memory. Hale.

Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care. Temple.

You may enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to [illegible] nothing which can discompose your mind. Dryden.

2. Convenience of time.

We'll make our leisures to attend on yours. Shakspeare.

They summon'd up their meiny, strait took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer. Shakspeare.

O happy youth!
For whom thy fates reserve so fair a bride:
He sigh'd, and had no leisure more to say,
His honour call'd his eyes another way. Dryden.

I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure. Locke.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.

More than I have said, loving countrymen,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakspeare's Richard III.

LE'ISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry.

He was the wretchedest thing when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely
That, if the rule be true, he should be gracious. Shakspeare.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march. Heyward.

The bridge is human life: upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threescore and ten intire arches. Addison.

LE'ISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or if with caution leisurely we past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

We descended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison.

LE'MAN. n. s. [Generally supposed to be l'aimant, the lover, Fr. but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from leef, Dut. or leop, Sax. beloved and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leveman.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress. Hanmer.

Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye;
But vanquish'd, thine eternal bondslave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take. Spenser.

A cup of wine,
That's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine. Shakspeare.

LE'MMA. n. s. [λῆμμα; lemme, French.] A proposition previously assumed.

LE'MON. n. s. [limon, Fr. limonium, low Latin.]

1. To afford or supply, on condition of repayment.

In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with Heaven. Shaks.

Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase. Leviticus.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend,
To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend. Dryd.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me. Shakspeare.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend. Dryden.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Covetousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back again. Decay of Piety.

Painting and poesy are two sisters so like, that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poesy, and the other a speaking picture. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor. Dryden.

Cato, lend me for a while thy patience,
And condescend to hear a young man speak. Addis.

Cephisa, thou
Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress' eyes. Phil.

LE'NDER. n. s. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade. Bacon.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers doors,
To call in money. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger. Addison.

LENGTH. n. s. [from leng, Sax.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Ticinum a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty: it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times. Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mezentius rushes on his foes,
And first unhappy Acron overthrows;
Stretch'd at his length he spurns the swarthy ground. Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay. Shaksp.

To get from th' enemy, and Ralph, free;
Left danger, fears, and foes, behind,
And beat, at least, three lengths the wind. Hudib.

Time glides along with undiscover'd haste,
The future but a length beyond the past. Dryden.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you pass'd,
What storms sustain'd, and on what shores been cast? Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of this common duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths. Locke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May Heav'n, great monarch, still augment your bliss,
With length of days, and every day like this. Dryd.

Such toil requir'd the Roman name,
Such length of labour for so vast a frame. Dryd.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain, and make one mountain with that on which it now stands. Addison.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced. Watts.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.

10. At LENGTH. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.
At length, at length, I have thee in my arms,
Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard,
And held us long asunder. Dryden.

To LE'NGTHEN. v. a. [from length.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.
Relaxing the fibres, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthened without rupture. Arbuthnot.
Falling dews with spangles deck'd the glade,
And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade. Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.
Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life. Shakspeare.
Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor: if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Daniel.
It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come, and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity. Atter.

3. To protract pronunciation.
The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, besides helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them. Dryden.

4. To LENGTHEN out. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.
What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryden.
I'd hoard up every moment of my life,
To lengthen out the payment of my tears. Dryden.
It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words. Addison.

To LE'NGTHEN. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.
One may as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value. Locke.
Still his further from its end;
Still finds its error lengthen with its way. Prior.

LE'NGTHWISE. adv. [length and wise.] According to the length; in a longitudinal direction.

LE'NIENT. adj. [leniens, Latin.]

1. Assuasive; softening; mitigating.
In the one passion man can strength enjoy;
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last land. Pope.

2. With of.
Consolatories writ
With studied argument, and much persuasion sought
Lenient of grief and anxious thought. Milton.

3. Laxative; emollient.

And many ſuch like libertines of ſin. Shakſpeare.

That word may be applied to ſome few libertines in the audience. Collier's View of the Stage.

4. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the ſon of a freedman.

Some perſons are forbidden to be accuſers on the ſcore of their ſex, as women; others on the ſcore of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the ſcore of their condition, as libertines againſt their patrons. Ayliffe's Parergon.

LI'BERTINE. adj. [libertin, Fr.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are many that marry not, but chuſe rather a libertine and impure ſingle life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent inquiry, if any perſon about her ſhould happen to be of libertine principles or morals? Swift.

LI'BERTINISM. n. ſ. [from libertine.] Irreligion; licentiouſneſs of opinions and practice.

That ſpirit of religion and ſeriouſneſs vaniſhed all at once, and a ſpirit of liberty and libertiniſm, of infidelity and profaneneſs, ſtarted up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons

LI'BERTY. n. ſ. [liberté, Fr. libertas, Lat.]

1. Freedom, as oppoſed to ſlavery.

My maſter knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlaſting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he ſwears he'll turn me away. Shakſpeare.

O liberty! thou goddeſs, heav'nly bright,
Profuſe of bliſs, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleaſures in thy preſence reign. Addiſon.

2. Exemption from tyranny or inordinate government.

Juſtly thou abhorr'ſt
The ſon, who, on the quiet ſtate of man
Such trouble brought, affecting to ſubdue
Rational liberty; yet know withal,
Since thy original lapſe, true liberty
Is loſt, which always with right reaſon dwells. Milton.

3. Freedom, as oppoſed to neceſſity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, ſo it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is ſuch, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

4. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majeſty gave not an inſolve country to any, much leſs did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Davies.

5. Relaxation of reſtraint: as, he ſees himſelf at liberty to chooſe his condition.

Licenſe they mean when they cry liberty. Milt.

6. Leave; permiſſion.

I ſhall take the liberty to conſider a third ground, which, with ſome men, has the ſame authority. Locke.

LIBI'DINOUS. n. ſ. [libidinoſus, Lat.] Lewd; luſtful.

None revolt from the faith, becauſe they muſt not look upon a woman to luſt after her, but becauſe they are much more reſtrained from the perpetration of their luſts. If wanton gladneſs and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the goſpel, they would have apoſtatized nevertheleſs. Bentley.

LIBI'DINOUSLY. adv. [from libidinous.] Lewdly; luſtfully.

LI'BRAL. adj. [libralis, Lat.] Of a pound weight. Dict.

LIBRA'RIAN. n. ſ. [librarius, Lat.]

1. One who has the care of a library.

2. One who tranſcribes or copies books.

Chryſoſtom's thrice ſwallows, and thrice refunds, the waves: this muſt be underſtood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarians. Brownes.

LI'BRARY. n. ſ. [librarie, Fr.] A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they open his library to view,
And antique regiſters for to aviſe,
There chanced to the prince's hand to riſe
An ancient book, hight Pritons' monuments. Fairy Queen.

I have given you the library of a prince, and a catalogue of ſuch books as he ought to read. Dry.

To LI'BRATE. v. a. [libro, Lat.] To poiſe; to balance; to hold in equipoiſe.

LIBRA'TION. n. ſ. [libratio, Lat. libration, French.]

1. The ſtate of being balanced.

This is what may be ſaid of the balance, and the libration of the body. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Their pinions ſtiff
In looſe librations ſtretch'd, to truſt the toil
Trembling refuſe. Thomſon's Spring.

2. [In aſtronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the ſun, and the latitude of the ſtars, change from time to time. Aſtronomers likewiſe aſcribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from eaſt to weſt, and from north to ſouth, becauſe that at full moon they ſometimes diſcover parts of her diſk which are not diſcovered at other times. Theſe kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Beſides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which conſiſts in this, that when the moon is at her greateſt elongation from the ſouth, her axis being then almoſt perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptick, the ſun muſt enlighten towards the north pole of the moon ſome parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, ſome parts of thoſe which he enlightened towards the oppoſite pole are obſcured; and this produces the ſame effect which the libration in latitude does. Dict. Trev.

Thoſe planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

LI'BRATORY. adj. [from libro, Lat.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louſe.

Red bliſters riſing on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noiſome ſweat,
And clammy dews, that loathſome lice beget;
Till the ſlow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden.

LI'CEBANE. n. ſ. [lice and bane.] A plant.

LI'CENSE. n. ſ. [licentia, Lat. licence, Fr.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and neceſſary reſtraint.

Some of the wiſer ſeeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the reſt to make Muſidorus their chief. Sidney.

Taunt my faults
With ſuch full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. Shakſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

They baul for freedom in their ſenſeleſs moods,
And ſtill revolt when truth would ſet them free;
Licence they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to licenſe by too juſt a name. Roſcom.

Though this be a ſtate of liberty, yet it is not a ſtate of licence; though man, in that ſtate, have an uncontroulable liberty to diſpoſe of his perſon or poſſeſſions, yet he has not liberty to deſtroy himſelf. Locke.

2. A grant of permiſſion.

They ſent ſome to bring them a licence from the ſenate. Judith.

Thoſe few abſtract names that the ſchools forged, and put into the mouths of their ſcholars, could never yet get admittance into common uſe, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addiſon on Italy.

3. Liberty; permiſſion.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accuſed have the accuſers face to face, and have licence to anſwer for himſelf. Acts.

To LI'CENSE. v. a. [licencier, Fr.]

A man might, after that time, ſue for the degree of licentiate or maſter in this faculty. Ayliffe.

To LICE'NTIATE. v. a. [licentier, Fr.] To permit; to encourage by licenſe.

We may not hazard either the ſtilling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarſe. L'Eſtrange.

LICE'NTIOUS. adj. [licencieux, French; licentioſus, Latin.]

1. Unreſtrained by law or morality.

Later ages pride, like corn-fed ſteed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat ſwoln encreaſe,
To all licentious luſt, and 'gan exceed
The meaſure of her mean, and natural firſt need.
Fairy Queen.

How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'ſt thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, conſecrate to thee,
With ruffian luſt ſhould be contaminate? Shakſp.

2. Preſumptuous; unconfined.

The Tyber, whoſe licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a ſmooth and inoffenſive courſe. Roſcom.

LICE'NTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.] With too much liberty; without juſt reſtraint.

The licentiates, ſomewhat licentiouſly, will pardon themſelves. Camden's Remains.

LICE'NTIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from licentious.] Boundleſs liberty; contempt of juſt reſtraint.

One error is ſo fruitful, as it begetteth a thouſand children, if the licentiouſneſs thereof be not timely reſtrained. Raleigh.

This cuſtom has been always looked upon, by the wiſeſt men, as an effect of licentiouſneſs, and not of liberty. Swift.

During the greateſt licentiouſneſs of the preſs, the character of the queen was inſulted. Swift.

LICH. n. ſ. [lic, Saxon.] A dead carcaſs; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordſhire, ſo named from martyred chriſtians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is ſtill retained in Scotland in the ſame ſenſe.

To LICK. v. a. [licean, Saxon; lecken, Dutch.]

1. To paſs over with the tongue.

Æſculapius went about with a dog and a ſhe-goat, both which he uſed much in his cures; the firſt for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diſeaſes of the ſtomach and lungs. Temple.

A bear's a ſavage beaſt;
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into ſhape and frame. Hudibras.

He with his tepid rays the roſe renews,
And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews.
Dryden.

I have ſeen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to diſtinguiſh the age of it by its taſte. Addiſon.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
The ſweet which is their poiſon. Shakſpeare.

3. To LICK up. To devour.

Now ſhall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the graſs. Numbers.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,
Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy truſtees, thyſelf:
Think how poſterity will treat thy name. Pope.

LICK. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A blow; rough uſage: a low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chaſed boar, and gave me a lick acroſs the face. Dryden.

LI'CKERISH. } adj. [liccian, a glutton,
LI'CKEROUS. } Saxon. This ſeems to be the proper way of ſpelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor, but with like.]

1. Nice in the choice of food.

Voluptuous men ſacrifice all ſubſtantial ſatisfactions to a liquoriſh palate. L'Eſtrange.

2. Eager; greedy to ſwallow; eager not with hunger but guſt.

It is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is ſo lickeriſh, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Stephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know
That it was love that ſhin'd in ſhining maid;
But lick'rous, poiſon'd, fain to her would go. Sid.

Certain rare manuſcripts, ſought in the moſt remote parts by Erpenius, the moſt excellent linguiſt, had been left to his widow, and were upon ſale to the jeſuits, liquoriſh chapmen of all ſuch ware. Wot.

In vain he proffer'd all his goods to ſave
His body, deſtin'd to that living grave;
The liquoriſh hag rejects the pelf with ſcorn,
And nothing but the man would ſerve her turn. Dry.

In ſome provinces they were ſo liquoriſh after man's fleſh, that they would ſuck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite. This ſenſe I doubt.

Would'ſt thou ſeek again to trap me here
With lickeriſh baits, fit to enſnare a brute? Milton.

LI'CKERISHNESS. n. ſ. [from lickeriſh.] Niceneſs of palate.

LI'CORICE. n. ſ. [γλυκύῤῥιζα; liquoricia, Italian.] A root of ſweet taſte.

Liquorice root is long and ſlender, externally of a duſky reddiſh brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taſte ſweeter than ſugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. The inſpiſſated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the firſt of which places it obtained the name of Spaniſh juice. Hill's Mat. Med.

LI'CTOR. n. ſ. [Latin.] A beadle that attended the conſuls to apprehend or puniſh criminals.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like ſtrumpets. Shakſpeare.

Proconſuls to their provinces
Haſting, or on return, in robes of ſtate,
Lictors and rods the enſigns of their power. Milton.

Democritus could feed his ſpleen, and ſhake
His ſides and ſhoulders till he felt 'em ake;
Though in his country-town no lictors were,
Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden.

LID. n. ſ. [hlib, Saxon; lied, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that ſhuts down over a veſſel; any ſtopple that covers the mouth, but not enters it.

Hope, inſtead of flying off with the reſt, ſtuck ſo cloſe to the lid of the cup, that it was ſhut down upon her. Addiſon.

2. The membrane that, when we ſleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,
Seek for thy noble father in the duſt. Shakſp.

Our eyes have lids, our ears ſtill ope we keep.
Davies.

That eye dropp'd ſenſe diſtinct and clear,
As any muſe's tongue could ſpeak;
When from its lid a pearly tear
Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes
To ſleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
And drive departed ſouls to Styx:
That rod was juſt a type of Sid's,
Which o'er a Britiſh ſenate's lids
Could ſcatter opium full as well,
And drive as many ſouls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. ſ. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with ſome other body; as, ſoap or ſalt.

Chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach. Shakſp.

All liquid things concocted by heat become yellow, as lye, wort, &c. Peacham on Drawing.

Lie. n. s. [lize, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

Thou liest, obstinate tyrant; with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou gav'st me. Shakspeare.

A lie is properly an adverse signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lye. South.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lye, than the will can chuse an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea: but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts.

2. A charge of falsehood: to give the lie, is a formulary phrase.

That lie shall lye so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge;
Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shaksp.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous.

The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply;
The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

To Lie. v. n. [leogan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, He lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakspeare.

If a soul lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore that which was delivered. Leviticus.

Should I lye against my right? Job.

2. To exhibit false representation.

10. To press upon afflictively.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Psalms.

He that commits a sin shall find
The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind,
Though bribes or favour shall assert his cause. Crece.

Shew the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Leonora. Addison.

11. To be troublesome or tedious.

Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least what lay upon their hands, in chemistry, it cannot be denied but princes may pass their time advantageously that way. Temple.

I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands. Addison's Guardian.

12. To be judicially imputed.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Sha.

13. To be in any particular state.

If money go before, all ways do lie open. Shak.

The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth. Isaiah.

The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still. Exodus.

Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement. Watts.

14. To be in a state of concealment.

Many things in them lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight. Locke.

15. To be in prison.

Your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you. Shakspeare.

16. To be in a bad state.

The generality of mankind lie pecking at one another, till one by one they are all torn to pieces. L'Estrange's Fables.

Are the gods to do your drudgery, and you lie bellowing with your finger in your mouth? L'Est.

17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.

To see a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion. Collier.

It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man, lying under a sharp fit of the stone for a week, receives from this fine sentence. Tillotson.

As a man should always be upon his guard against the vices to which he is most exposed, so we should take a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct. Addis.

The maintenance of the clergy is precarious; and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be defrauded. Swift.

18. To consist.

The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prodigious perfection.
—It lies much in your holding up. Shakspeare.

He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour, forgets the early riding and hard riding of huntsmen. Locke.

19. To be in the power; to belong to.

Do'st thou endeavour, as much as in thee lies, to preserve the lives of all men? Dryden.

He shews himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to black it, as much as in him lies. Stillingfleet on Idolatry.

Mars is the warrior's god; in him it lies
On whom he favours to confer the prize. Dryden.

20. To be valid in a court of judicature: as, an action lieth against one.

21. To cost: as, it lies me in more money.

22. To Lie at. To importune; to tease.

23. To Lie by. To rest; to remain still.

Ev'ry thing that heard him play,
Ev'n the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by;
In sweet musick is such art,
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or hearing die. Shakspeare.

24. To Lie down. To rest; to go into a state of repose.

The leopard shall lie down with the kid. Isaiah.
The needy shall lie down in safety. Isaiah.

2. Preſent ſtate; as diſtinct from other parts of human exiſtence.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for t'other!
Dream of a ſhadow! a reflection made
From the falſe glories of the gay reflected bow,
Is more a ſolid thing than thou!
Thou weak built iſthmus, that doſt proudly riſe
Up betwixt two eternities;
Yet canſt not wave nor wind ſuſtain,
But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.

When I conſider life, 'tis all a cheat,
Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falſer than the former day;
Lies more; and when it ſays we ſhall be bleſt
With ſome new joy, takes off what we poſſeſt.
Strange cozenage! none would live paſt years again,
Yet all hope pleaſure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the firſt ſprightly running could not give:
I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind
Through life's perverſe meanders errs,
He can imagin'd pleaſures find,

Tremble, like aſpen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the ſilken ſtrings delight to kiſs them;
He would not then have touch'd them for his life!
Shakſpeare.
Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
Almoſt no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
That once was miſtreſs of the field, and flouriſh'd,
I'll hang my head, and periſh. Shakſpeare.
Arnus, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right ſide a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce. Peacham.
Take but the humbleſt lily of the field;
And if our pride will to our reaſon yield,
It muſt by ſure compariſon be ſhown,
That on the regal ſeat great David's ſon,
Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r,
Shines with leſs glory than that ſimple flow'r. Prior.
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

A devil in an everlaſting garment hath him,
One whoſe hard heart is button'd up with ſteel.
Shakſpeare.

Oh what a ſympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliſs. Sandys.

All theſe up-whirl'd aloft
Fly o'er the backſide of the world far off,
Into a limbo large, and broad, ſince call'd
The paradiſe of fools. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

2. Any place of miſery and reſtraint.

For he no ſooner was at large,
But Trulla ſtraight brought on the charge;
And in the ſelf ſame limbo put
The knight and ſquire, where he was ſhut. Hudib.

The pitfall, nor the gin. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

You muſt lay lime, to tangle her deſires,
By wailful ſonnets, whoſe compoſed rhimes
Should be full fraught with ſerviceable vows. Shak.

Juſtice of the ſtate
Than are new-benefic'd miniſters, he throws,
Like nets or lime twigs, whereſoe'er he goes,
His title of barriſter on every wench. Donne.

A thruſh was taken with a buſh of lime twigs. L'Eſtrange.

Then toils for beaſts, and lime for birds were found,
And deep-mouth'd dogs did foreſt walks ſurround. Dryden.

Or court a wife, ſpread out his wily parts,
Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows' hearts. Pope.

2. Matter of which mortar is made: ſo called becauſe uſed in cement.

There are ſo many ſpecies of lime ſtone, that we are to underſtand by it in general any ſtone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great ebullition and noiſe on being thrown into water, falling into a looſe white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is uſually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of ſtone. Hill's Materia Medica.

They were now, like ſand without lime, ill bound together, eſpecially as many as were Engliſh, who were at a gaze, looking ſtrange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their ſide. Bacon.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen prais'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the ſtones,
But all admire Inigo Jones. Swift.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any ſort of ſtone that is not ſandy, or very cold. Mortimer.

3. The linden tree. [lind, Sax. tilia, Lat.]

The flower conſiſts of ſeveral leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a roſe, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footſtalk of each cluſter of flowers, from whoſe cup riſes the pointal, which becomes a turbinated, of one capſule, containing an oblong ſeed. The timber is uſed by carvers and turners. Theſe trees continue ſound many years, and grow to a conſiderable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one in Norfolk ſixteen yards in circuit. Miller.

LI'TERAL. adj. [literal, Fr. litera, Lat.]

1. According to the primitive meaning; not figurative.

Through all the writings of the ancient fathers, we ſee that the words which were, do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical uſe, and are as ſo many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did ſignify in the letter, is accompliſhed in the truth. Hooker

A foundation being primarily of uſe in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an houſe, or other building; nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence. Hammond.

2. Following the letter, or exact words.

The fitteſt for publick audience are ſuch as, following a middle courſe between the rigour of literal tranſlations and the liberty of paraphraſts, do with greater ſhortneſs and plainneſs deliver the meaning. Hooker.

3. Conſiſting of letters: as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the ciphers.

LI'TERAL. n. f. Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is to trouble things to use metaphorical expreſſions unto the people, and what abſurd conceits they will ſwallow in their literals, an example we have in our profeſſion. Brown.

LITERA'LITY. n. f. [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true denteroſcopy and ſecond intention of the words, they are fain to omit their ſuperconſequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not ſometimes perſuaded beyond their literalities. Brown.

LI'TERALLY. adv. [from literal.]

LO. interj. [la, Sax.] Look; ſee; behold. It is a word uſed to recal the attention generally to ſome object of ſight; ſometimes to ſomething heard, but not properly; often to ſomething to be underſtood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakſpeare.
Now muſt the world point at poor Catherine,
And ſay, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife. Shak.
Lo! I have a weapon,
A better never did itſelf ſuſtain
Upon a ſoldier's thigh. Shakſpeare.
Thou did'ſt utter,
I am yours for ever.
Why lo you now, I've ſpoke to the purpoſe twice. Shakſpeare.
For lo! he ſung the world's ſtupendous birth. Roſcommon.
Lo! heav'n and earth combine
To bleſs our bold deſign. Dryden's Albion.

LOACH. n. ſ. [loche, Fr.]
The loach is a moſt dainty fiſh; he breeds and feeds in little and clear ſwift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the ſharpeſt ſtreams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is ſuitable to that length: he is of the ſhape of an eel, and has a beard of wattels like a barbel: he has two fins at his ſides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown ſpots: his mouth, barbel-like, under his noſe. This fiſh is uſually full of eggs or ſpawn, and is by Geſner, and other phyſicians, commended for great nouriſhment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and ſtomach of ſick perſons, and is to be fiſhed for with a ſmall worm, at the bottom, for he ſeldom riſes above the gravel. Walton's Angler.

LOAD. n. ſ. [hlabe, Sax.]

1. A burden; a freight; lading.
Fair plant with fruit ſurcharg'd,
Deigns none to eaſe thy load, and taſte thy ſweet? Milton.
Then on his back he laid the precious load.
And ſought his wonted ſhelter. Dryden.
Let India boaſt her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the balmy tree;
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which theſe trees adorn. Pope.

2. Weight; preſſure; encumbrance.
Jove lighten'd of its load
Th' enormous maſs, the labour of a god. Pope.

3. Weight, or violence of blows.
Like lion mov'd they laid on load,
And made a cruel fight. Chevy Chace.
For heavier load thyſelf expect to feel
From my prevailing arm. Milton.
And Mneſtheus laid hard load upon his helm. Dryden.

4. Any thing that depreſſes.
How a man can have a quiet and chearful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unleſs he be very ignorant. Ray.

5. As much drink as one can bear.
There are thoſe that can never ſleep without their load, nor enjoy one eaſy thought, till they have laid all their cares to reſt with a bottle. L'Eſtrange.
The thund'ring god,
Ev'n he withdrew to reſt, and had his load. Dryd.

To LOAD. v. a. preterit loaded; par. loaden or laden. [hlaban, Sax.]

1. To burden; to freight.

She was the loadſtar of my life; ſhe the bleſſing of mine eyes: ſhe the overthrow of my deſires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow. Sidney.
My Helice, the loadſtar of my life. Spenſer.
O happy ſtar!
Your eyes are loadſtars, and your tongue ſweet air!
More tuneable than lark to ſhepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when haw-thorn buds appear. Shakſpeare.
That clear majeſty
Which ſtandeth fix'd, yet ſpreads her heavenly worth,
Lodeſtone to hearts, and lodeſtar to all eyes. Davies.

LO'ADSTONE. n. ſ. [properly lodeſtone or leading-ſtone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the ſtone on which the mariners compaſs needle is touched to give it a direction north and ſouth.
The loadſtone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large maſſes, of a deep iron gray where freſh broken, and often tinged with a browniſh or reddiſh colour; it is very heavy, and conſiderably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in moſt other places where there are mines of that metal. Hill.
The uſe of the loadſtone was kept as ſecret as any of the other myſteries of the art. Swift.

LOAF. n. ſ. [from hlaf or laf, Sax.]

1. A maſs of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.
Eaſy it is
Of a cut loaf to ſteal a ſhive we know. Shakſpeare.
The bread corn in the town ſufficed not for ſix days, hereupon the ſoldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himſelf to a loaf a-day. Hayward.
With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and leſs parts than a lump of lead of the ſame bigneſs. Digby.

2. Any thick maſs into which a body is wrought.
Your wine becomes ſo limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf ſugar in each bottle. Mort.

LOGARITHMS. n. s. [logarithme, French; λόγος and ἀριθμος.]
Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchiston, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, to the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one, for instance.

0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128	256	512

Where the numbers above, beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dividing the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and trisecting them for the cube, and so on. Harris.

LOGGATS. n. s.
Loggats is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the same which is now called kittle-pins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. Hanmer.
Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but
To play at loggats with them. Shakspeare.

LOGGERHEAD. n. s. [logge, Dut. stupid, and head; or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt; a blockhead; a thickskull.
Where hast been, Hal?
—With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other people's fires? L'Estrange.

To fall to LOGGERHEADS. } To scuffle; to
To go to LOGGERHEADS. } fight without weapons.
A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his master. L'Estrange.

LOGGERHEADED. adj. [from loggerhead.] Dull; stupid; doltish.
You loggerheaded and unpolished groom, what! no attendance? Shakspeare.

LOGICK. n. s. [logique, Fr. logica, Lat. from λογος.] The art of reasoning. One of the seven sciences.
Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. Watts' Logick.
Talk logick with acquaintance,
And practise rhetorick in your common talk. Shakspeare.
By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. Clarendon.
Here foam'd rebellious logick, gnaw'd and bound,
There stript fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground. Pope.

LOGICAL. adj. [from logick.]
1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.
The heretick complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilities. Hooker.
Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. Dryden.
We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtile rules, and finding out logical argument, since it would be more perfection not to want them. Baker.
2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick.
A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head. Spectator.

LOGICALLY. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logick.
How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?
From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either. Prior.

LOGICIAN. n. s. [logicien, Fr. logicus, Lat.] A teacher or professor of logick; a man versed in logick.
If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters. Bacon.
If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. Addison.
Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,
Came whip and spur Pope's Dunciad.
A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception. Swift.
The Arabian physicians were subtile men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author Baker.

LOGMAN. n. s. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.
For your take
Am I this patient logman. Shakspeare's Tempest.

LOGOMACHY. n. s. [λογομαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words.
Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities, and so transformed her to a mere kind of sophistry and logomachy. Howel.

LOGWOOD. n. s.
Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy. Hill's Mat. Med.
To make a light purple, mingle cerusse with logwood water. Peacham.

LOHOCK. n. s.
Lohock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called eclegmas, lambatives, or linctures. Quincy.

LOIN. n. s. [llwyn, Welsh.]
1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.
2. Loins; the reins.
My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins. Shakspeare's King Lear.
Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins! Shakspeare.
Virgin mother, hail!
High in the love of Heav'n, yet from my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son
Of God most high. Milton's Paradise Lost.
A multitude like which the populous north
Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass
Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the south. Milton.

To LOITER. v. n. [loteren, Dutch.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.
Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. Shakspeare.
Whence this long delay?
You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away. Dryden.
Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away. Locke.
If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity Rogers.

LOITERER. n. s. [from loiter.] A fingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.
Give gloves to thy reapers a largess to cry,
And daily to loiterers have a good eye. Tusser.
The poor, by idleness or unthriftiness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers. Hayward.
Where hast thou been, thou loiterer?
Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd,
To search it thou wert come. Otway.
Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we live not like idle loiterers and truants. More.
Ever listless loit'rers, that attend
No cause, no truth, no duty, and no friend. Pope.

To LOLL. v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]
1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.
So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so
Shakes and pulls me. Shakspeare's Othello.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakspeare.
Close by a softly murm'ring stream,
Where lovers us'd to loll and dream. Hudibras.
To loll on couches, rich with citron seeds,
And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds. Dryd.
Void of care he lolls supine in state,
And leaves his business to be done by fate. Dryd.
But wanton now, and lolling at our ease,
We suffer all the inveterate ills of peace. Dryden.
A lazy, lolling sort
Of ever listless loit'rers. Dunciad.
2. To hang out: used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.
The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet. Dryd.
With harmless play amidst the bowls he past'd,
And with his lolling tongue affay'd the taste. Dryd.

To LOLL. v. a. To put out; used of the tongue exerted.
All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hadst thou but, James-like, a face behind,
To see the people, when thy play mouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot. Dryden's Persius.
By Strymon's freezing streams he sat alone,
Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,
Fierce tygers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. Dryden's Virgil.

LOMP. n. s. A kind of roundish fish.

LONE. adj. [contracted from alone.]
1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

LORE. n. s. [from læpan, Saxon, to learn.] Lesson; doctrine; instruction.
And, for the modest lore of maidenhood
Bids me not sojourn with these armed men,
Oh whither shall I fly? Fairfax.
The law of nations, or the lore of war. Fairfax.
Calm regions once,
And full of peace; now tost, and turbulent!
For understanding rul'd not; and the will
Heard not her lore; but in subjection now
To sensual appetite, Milton's Paradise Lost.
The subtile fiend his lore
Soon learn'd, now milder, and thus answer'd smooth. Milton.
Lo! Rome herself, proud mistress now no more

Such losels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any thrift, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser.
A losel wand'ring by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Fairy Queen.
Be not with work of losels wit defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named. Hub. Tale.
By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whose losses by losels doth shew
More heere then is needful to tell. Tusser.
A gross lag!
And, losel, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakspeare.

LOSER. n. s. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope: the contrary to winner or gainer.
With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shaksp.
No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Taylor.

It cannot but, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.

A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief;
A sword and helm shall chear the loser's grief. Dry.

Losers and malcontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South.

LOSS. n. f. [from lose.]

I found th' effect of love in idleness. Shaksp.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shaksp.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shaksp.

What need a vermil-tinctur'd lip for that,
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn? Milt.

Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end,
Not wedlock treachery, ending ring life Milton.

A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier.

You know y' are in my power by making love. Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,
And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.

Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
And those love-darting eyes must roll no more. Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakspeare.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Daniel.

The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love. Philippians.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. John.

His fable is accommodated to his subject, either high or low, if his fault be too much lowness, that of Persius is the hardness of his metaphors. Dryd.

5. Submissiveness.

The people were in such lowness of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so politick a king as his father. Bacon.

6. Depression; dejection.

Hence that poverty and lowness of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person. Swift.

LOWTHO'UGHTED. adj. [low and thought.] Having the thoughts withheld from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow-minded.

Above the smoak and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Id.

Oh grace serene! Oh virtue heav'nly fair!
Divine oblation of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And fait our early immortality! Pope.

LOWSPI'RITED. adj. [low and spirit.] Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not sprightly.

Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind; and then, in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lowspirited moped creature. Locke.

LOXODRO'MICK. n. f. [λοξὸς and δρόμος.]

Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them: hence the table of rhombs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick. Harris.

LO'YAL. adj. [loyal, Fr.]

1. Obedient; true to the prince.

Of Gloster's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot. Shak.

The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties. Knolles.

Loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.
Dryden.

2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.

Hail, wedded love! by thee
Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure. Milton.

There Laodamus with Evadne moves,
Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves. Dryden.

LO'YALIST. n. f. [from loyal.] One who professes uncommon adherence to his king.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians. Howel.

LO'YALLY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king; with fidelity to a lover.

The circling year I wait, with ampler stores,
And fitter pomp, to hail my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd. Pope.

LO'YALTY. n. f. [loiauté, Fr.]

1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.

Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our fault mere folly; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer. Sha.

He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required. Clarendon.

Abdiel faithful found
Unshaken, unseduc'd, unterrify'd,
His loyalty he kept.
For loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Although it be not shone upon. Hudibras.

2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.

LO'ZENGE. n. f. [losenge, French. Of unknown etymology.]

1. A rhomb.

The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and though the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or losenge. Wotton.

2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces, to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.

3. A cake of preserved fruit: both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.

LU'BBARD. n. f. [from lubber.] A lazy sturdy fellow.

Yet their wine and their victuals those curmudgeon lubbards
Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards.
Swift.

LU'BBER. n. f. [Of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubbed, said by Junius to signify in Danish fat.] A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky losel; a booby.

For tempest and showers deceiveth a many,
And lingering lubbers loose many a penie. Tusser.

These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the havens, leaping up and down, pining like a fat lubber out of breath. Carew.

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his feet were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking. Shakspeare.

A notable lubber thou reported him to be. Sha.

Tell how the drudging goblin sweat;
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,

That ten day laborers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fiend. Milton.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did your lubber ſtate mankind beſtride. Dry.
How can you name that ſuperannuated lubberd Congreve.

LU'BBERLY. adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky.

The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and the ſaponaceous remedies, ſome of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and ſtimulate. Sharp.

To LUBRI'CITATE. v. a. [from lubricus, Lat.] To ſmooth; to make ſlippery.

LUBRI'CITY. n. ſ. [from lubricus, Latin; lubricité, French.]

1. Slipperineſs; ſmoothneſs of ſurface.
2. Aptneſs to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.

Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature; the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preſerves the mucilage from inſpiſſation. Ray.

3. Uncertainty; ſlipperineſs; inſtability.

The manifold impoſſibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the ſame conveniencies in any modification. More.
He that enjoyed crowns, and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of univerſal [illegible]; and yet the politician is not diſcouraged at the inconſtancy of human affairs, and the lubricity of his ſubject. Glanville.
A ſtate of tranquillity is never to be attained, but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune. L'Eſtrange.

4. Wantonneſs; lewdneſs.

From the lecherry of theſe fauns, he thinks that ſatyr is derived from them, as if wantonneſs and lubricity were eſſential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided. Dryden.

LU'BRICK. adj. [lubricus, Lat.]

1. Slippery; ſmooth on the ſurface.

A throng
Of ſhort thick ſobs, whoſe thund'ring volleys float

Nor lend like influence from his lucent ſeat. Ben Jonſon.

A ſpot like which perhaps
Aſtronomer in the ſun's lucent orb,
Through his glaz'd optick tube yet never ſaw. Milton.

LU'CERN. n. ſ. [medica.] An herb remarkable for quick growth.

LU'CID. adj. [lucidus, Lat. lucide, Fr.]

1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms
A military veſt of purple flow'd;
Livelier than Melibœan. Milton.
It contracts it, preſerving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light. Ray.
If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, on the end of one's finger, be held at the diſtance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glaſs where it is moſt in motion, the electrick vapour which is excited by the friction of the glaſs againſt the hand, will, by daſhing againſt the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into ſuch an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm. Newton.
The pearly ſhell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phœbus warm the op'ning ore to gold. Pope.

2. Pellucid; tranſparent.

On the tertile banks,
Of Abbana and Pharphar, lucid ſtreams. Milton.
On the tranſparent ſide of a globe, half ſilver and half of a tranſparent metal, we ſaw certain ſtrange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers ſtopped by that lucid ſubſtance. Gulliver's Travels.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madneſs.

The long diſſentions of the two houſes, which, although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauſes, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth. Bacon.
Some beams of wit on other ſouls may fall,
Strike through and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,
His riſing fogs prevail upon the day. Dryden.
I believed him in a lucid interval, and deſired he would pleaſe to let me ſee his book. Tatler.
A few ſenſual and voluptuous perſons may, for a ſeaſon, eclipſe this native light of the ſoul; but can never ſo wholly ſmother and extinguiſh it, but that, at ſome lucid intervals, it will recover itſelf again, and ſhine forth to the conviction of their conſcience. Bentley.

LUCI'DITY. n. ſ. [from lucid.] Splendour; brightneſs. Dict.

LUCI'FEROUS. adj. [lucifer, Lat.] Giving light; affording means of diſcovery.

LU'CKINESS. n. ſ. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; caſual happineſs.

He who ſometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckineſs of the accident will excuſe the irregularity of his proceeding. Locke.

LU'CKLESS. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of ſuch luck, the luckleſs lucky maid
A long time with that ſavage people ſtaid,
To gather breath in many miſeries. Spenſer.
Never ſhall my thoughts be bate,
Though luckleſs, yet without diſgrace. Suckling.
What elſe but his immoderate luſt of pow'r,
Prayers made and granted in a luckleſs hour? Dry.

LU'CKY. adj. [from luck; *geluck*ing, Dutch.] Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more luckly wight,
Diſmay'd with that deformed, dismal ſight,
Fled faſt away. Spenſer.
Perhaps ſome arm more lucky than the reſt,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage. Addiſon.

LU'CRATIVE. adj. [lucratif, Fr. lucrativus, Lat.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize being the moſt lucrative, may bear uſury at a good rate: other contracts not ſo. Bacon.
The diſpoſition of Ulyſſes inclined him to purſue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture. Broome.

LU'CRE. n. ſ. [lucrum, Lat.] Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage. In an ill ſenſe.

Malice and lucre in them
Have laid this woe here. Shakſpeare.
They all the ſacred myſteries of Heav'n
To their own vile advantages ſhall turn
Of lucre and ambition. Milton.
A ſoul ſupreme in each hard inſtance try'd,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of pow'r, the blaſt of publick breath,
The luſt of lucre, and the dread of death. Pope.

LUCRI'FEROUS. adj. [lucrum and fero, Lat.] Gainful; profitable.

Silver was afterwards ſeparated from the gold, but in ſo ſmall a quantity, that the experiment, the coſts and pains conſidered, was not lucriferous. Boyle.

What do you mean
To doat thus on ſuch luggage? Shakſpeare.

Think not thou to find me ſlack, or need
Thy politick maxims, or that cumberſome
Luggage of war there ſhown me. Milton.

How durſt thou with that ſullen luggage
O' th' ſelf, old n'n, and other baggage,
T' oppoſe thy lumber againſt us? Hudibras.

The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the ruffling winds of paſſion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be caſt out till all be ſhipwrecked. Glanville.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,
And leave the luggage of good works behind. Dry.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey. Swift to Pope.

LU'GUBRIOUS. adj. [lugubre, Fr. lugubris, Lat.] Mournful; ſorrowful.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whining tone, makes up the ſum of many mens humiliations. Decay of Piety.

LU'KEWARM. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is hleoð; in old Friſick klij; in Dutch lieuwte; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the firſt word, the force of the ſecond; as we ſay, boiling hot.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; ſo warm as to give only a pleaſing ſenſation.

A dreary corſe, whoſe life away did paſs,
All hallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled freſh alas! Spenſ.

May you a better feaſt never behold,
You knot of mouth friends: ſmoke and lukewarm water
Is your perfection. Shakſpeare.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to contemperate hot and ſharp humours. Wiſeman's Surgery.

Whence is it but from this attractive power, that water, which alone diſtils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not diſtil from ſalt of tartar without a great heat? Newton.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If ſome few continue ſtedfaſt, it is an obedience ſo lukewarm and languiſhing, that it merits not the name of paſſion. Dryden.

This ſober conduct is a mighty virtue
In lukewarm patriots Addiſon.

LU'NACY. n. ſ. [from luna, Lat. the moon.] A kind of madneſs influenced by the moon; madneſs in general.

Love is merely madneſs, and deſerves as well a dark houſe and a whip as madmen do; and the reaſon why they are not ſo puniſhed and cured is, that the lunacy is ſo ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Shakſpeare's As you like it.

Your kindred ſhun your houſe,
As beaten hence by your ſtrange lunacy. Shakſp.

There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, that, when he had nothing, thought all the ſhips that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have ſo much coming in, think you have nothing. Suckling.

LU'NAR. } adj. [lunaire, French; luna-
LU'NARY. } ris, Latin.]

1. Relating to the moon.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that diſtill'd by magick ſlights
Shall ſuſe ſuch artificial ſprights,
As by the ſtrength of their illuſion,
Shall draw him on to his confuſion. Shakſpeare.

Like caſtles built by magick art in air,
That vaniſh at approach, ſuch thoughts appear Granville.

2. Done or produced by magick.

And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and ſhake
Till all thy magick ſtructures rear'd ſo high,
Were ſhatter'd into heaps. Milton.

MAGI'CIAN. n. ſ. [magicus, Latin.] One ſkilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To ſtop devoted charitable deeds? Shakſpeare.

An old magician, that did keep
Th' Heſperian fruit, and made the dragon ſleep;
Her potent charms do troubled ſouls relieve,
And, where the hills, makes calmeſt ſouls to grieve.
Waller.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician or a magician. Locke.

MAGISTE'RIAL. adj. [from magiſter, Lat.]

1. Such as ſuits a maſter.

Such a government is paternal, not magiſterial. King Charles.

He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uſes a magiſterial authority while he inſtructs him. Dryden.

2. Lofty; arrogant; proud; inſolent; deſpotick.

We are not magiſterial in opinions, nor, dictator-like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown.

Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words and magiſterial looks for current payment. L'Eſtrange.

Thoſe men are but trepanned who are called to govern, being inveſted with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing elſe but to mock and betray them into a ſplendid and magiſterial way of being ridiculous. South.

3. Chymically prepared, after the manner of a magiſtery.

Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magiſterial ſalt, to good purpoſe in ſome fevers: the tincture is no more than a ſolution of the magiſterial ſalt. Grew.

MAGISTE'RIALLY. adv. [from magiſterial.] Arrogantly; with an air of authority.

A downright advice may be miſtaken, as if it were ſpoken magiſterially. Bacon.

Over their pots and pipes, they claim and engroſs all wholly to themſelves, magiſterially cenſuring the wiſdom of all antiquity, ſcoffing at all piety, and new-modelling the world. South.

MAGISTE'RIALNESS. n. ſ. [from magiſterial.] Haughtineſs; airs of a maſter.

Perceptorineſs is of two ſorts; the one a magiſterialneſs in matters of opinion, the other a poſitiveneſs in relating matters of fact: in the one we impoſe upon men's underſtandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.

MA'GISTERY, n. ſ. [magiſterium, Latin.]

Magiſtery is a term made uſe of by chemiſts to ſignify ſometimes a very fine powder, made by ſolution and precipitation; as of biſmuth, lead, &c. and ſometimes rein and reſinous ſubſtances; as thoſe of jalap, ſcammony, &c. but the moſt genuine acceptation is to expreſs that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or moſt part, is, by the addition of ſomewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into cryſtals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.

Paracelſus extracteth the magiſtery of wine, expoſing it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the ſpirit be uncongealed in the centre. Brown.

The magiſtery of vegetables conſiſts but of the more ſoluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

MA'GISTRACY. n. ſ. [magiſtratus, Lat.] Office or dignity of a magiſtrate.

You ſhare the world, her magiſtracies, prieſthoods, Wealth and felicity, amongſt you, friends. B. Jon.

He had no other intention but to diſſuade men from magiſtracy, or undertaking the publick offices of ſtate. Brown.

Some have diſputed even againſt magiſtracy itſelf. Attterbury.

Duelling is not only an uſurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an inſult upon magiſtracy and good government. Clariſſa.

MA'GISTRALLY. adv. [magiſtralis, low Latin.] Deſpotically; authoritatively; magiſterially.

What a preſumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to aſſume to himſelf ſuch a licence to controul ſo magiſtrally! Bramhall.

MA'GISTRATE. n. ſ. [magiſtratus, Lat.] A man publickly inveſted with authority; a governour; an executor of the laws.

They chuſe their magiſtrate!
And ſuch a one as he, who puts his ſhall,
His popular ſhall, againſt a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece Shakſpeare.

I treat here of thoſe legal puniſhments which magiſtrates inflict upon their diſobedient ſubjects. Decay of Piety.

MAGNA'LITY. n. ſ. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; ſomething above the common rate. Not uſed.

Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown.

MAGNANI'MITY. n. ſ. [magnanimité, Fr. magnanimita, Latin.] Greatneſs of mind; bravery; elevation of ſoul.

With deadly hue, an armed corſe did lye,
In whoſe dead face he read great magnanimity.
Spenſer.

Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weighed, from whoſe magnanimity, in cauſes of moſt extreme hazard, thoſe ſtrange and unwonted reſolutions have grown, which, for all circumſtances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker.

They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to mitery beneath their fears;
The reſt was magnanimity to remit,
If ſome convenient ranſom was propoſ'd. Milton.

Exploding many things under the name of trifles, is a very falſe proof either of wiſdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.

MAGNA'NIMOUS. adj. [magnanimus, Lat.] Great of mind; elevated in ſentiment; brave.

To give a kingdom hath been thought
Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to aſſume. Milton.

In ſtrength
All mortals I exceſſ'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits.
Milton.

Magnanimous induſtry is a reſolved aſſiduity and care, unſeverable to any worthy work. Grew.

MAGNA'NIMOUSLY. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatneſs of mind.

A complete and generous education fits a man to perform juſtly, ſkilfully, and magnanimouſly, all the offices of peace and war. Milton.

MA'GNET. n. ſ. [magnes, Latin.] The loadſtone; the ſtone that attracts iron.

Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliſs,
The larger loadſtone that, the nearer this. Dryden.

It may be reaſonable to aſk, Whether obeying the magnet be eſſential to iron? Locke.

MAGNE'TICAL. } adj. [from magnet.]
MAGNE'TICK. }

1. Relating to the magnet.

Review this whole magnetick ſcheme. Blackm.

Water is nineteen times lighter, and by conſequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is ſo rare as very readily, and without the leaſt oppoſition, to tranſmit the magnetick effluvia, and eaſily to admit quickſilver into its pores, and to let water paſs through it. Newton.

2. Having powers correſpondent to thoſe of the magnet.

The magnet acts upon iron through all denſe bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, ſilver, lead, glaſs, water. Newton.

3. Attractive; having the power to draw things diſtant.

The moon is magnetical of heat, as the ſun is of cold and moiſture. Bacon.

She ſhould all parts to reunion bow;
She, that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and faſten hundred parts in one. Donne.

They, as they move tow'rds his all-cheering lamp,
Turn ſwift their various motions, or are turn'd
By his magnetick beam. Milton's Par. Loſt.

4. Magnetick is once uſed by Milton for magnet.

Draw out with credulous deſire, and lead
At will the manlieſt, reſoluteſt breaſt,
As the magnetick hardeſt iron draws. Par. Reg.

MA'GNETISM. n. ſ. [from magnet.]

MAGNIFI'ABLE. adj. [from magnify.] Worthy to be extolled or praiſed. Unuſual.

Number, though wonderful in itſelf, and ſufficiently magnifiable from its demonſtrable affection, hath yet received adjections from the multiplying conceits of men Brown.

MAGNI'FICAL. } adj. [magnificus, Lat.]
MAGNI'FICK. } Illuſtrious; grand; great; noble. Proper, but little uſed.

The houſe that is to be builded for the Lord muſt be exceeding magnifical, of fame and glory, throughout all countries. 1 Chronicles.

Thrones, dominations, princedoms, virtues, pow'rs!
If theſe magnifick titles yet remain,
Not merely titular. Milton.

O parent! theſe are thy magnifick deeds,
Thy trophies! Milton.

MAGNI'FICENCE. n. ſ. [magnificentia, Lat.] Grandeur of appearance; ſplendour.

This deſert ſoil
Wants not her hidden luſtre, gems, and gold,
Nor want we ſkill or art, from whence to raiſe
Magnificence. Milton.

Not Babylon
Nor great Alcairo, ſuch magnificence
Equall'd in all her glories to inſhrine
Belus or Serapis, their gods; or ſeat
Their kings, when Egypt with Aſſyria ſtrove
In wealth and luxury. Milton.

One may obſerve more ſplendour and magnificence in particular perſons houſes in Genoa, than in thoſe that belong to the publick. Addiſon.

MAGNI'FICENT. adj. [magnificus, Latin.]

1. Grand in appearance; ſplendid; pompous.

Man he made, and for him built
Magnificent this world. Milton.

It is ſuitable to the magnificent harmony of the univerſe, that the ſpecies of creatures ſhould, by gentle degrees, aſcend upward from us toward his perfection, as we ſee they gradually deſcend from us downwards. Locke.

Immortal glories in my mind revive,
When Rome's exalted beauties I deſcry,
Magnificent in piles of ruin lie. Addiſon.

2. Fond of ſplendour; ſetting greatneſs to ſhow.

MA'NDRAKE. n. ſ. [maudragoras, Latin; mandragóre, French.] A plant.

The flower of the mandrake conſiſts of one leaf in the ſhape of a bell, and is divided at the top into ſeveral parts; the root is ſaid to bear a reſemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the perſon who dares to attempt ſuch a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.

Among other virtues, mandrake has been falſely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a ſoporifick quality, and the ancients uſed it when they wanted a narcotick of the moſt powerful kind. Hill's Materia Medica.

Would curſes kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter ſearching terms,
As curſt, as harſh, and horrible to hear. Shakſp.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowſy ſyrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that ſweet ſleep. Shak.

And ſhrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shakſ.

A woman, impudent and mannish grown,
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man. Shak.

When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore,
Astride on horse-back hunts the Tuscan boar. Dry.

MA'NOR. n. f. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin; maner, Armorick.]

Manor signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass of ground granted by the king to some man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterwards this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, imposing them again such services and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the inferiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these mansions and lands so given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to their king; and thereby they fall common in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site: for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Cowel.

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Ev'n now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me. Shakspeare.

Kinsmen of mine
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly. O many

MARBLEHE'ARTED. adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; insensible; hardhearted.

Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakspeare's King Lear.

MA'RCASITE. n. s.

The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bismuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallick. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, naturally found among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it. Hill.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I restrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures. Woodward Met. Fossils.

The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, and metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals. Newton's Opticks.

[illegible]
To ripen [illegible] Shak.

MARCH. n. s. [illegible] month of the year.

March is dra[illegible] a helmet upon his [illegible] dedicated to Mars. [illegible]

And ſet ſoft hyacinths with iron-blue,
To ſhade marſh-marigolds of ſhining hue Dryden.

MA'RSHAL. n. ſ. [mareſchal, Fr. mareſchallus, low Lat. from marſcale, old Fr. a word compounded of mare, which, in old Fr. ſignified a horſe, and ſcale, a ſort of ſervant; one that has the charge of horſes.]

1. The chief officer of arms.

The duke of Suffolk claims
To be high ſteward; next the duke of Norfolk
To be earl marſhal. Shakſpeare.

2. An officer who regulates combats in the liſts.

Dares their pride preſume againſt my laws,
As in a lit ed field to fight their cauſe?
Unaſk'd the royal grant; no marſhal by,
As kingly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

3. Any one who regulates rank or order at a feaſt, or any other aſſembly.

Through the hall there walked to and fro
A jolly yeoman, marſhal of the ſame,
Whoſe name was Appetite; he did beſtow
Both gueſts and meats, whenever in they came,
And knew them how to order without blame. Spenſ.

4. A harbinger; a purſuivant; one who goes before a prince to declare his coming, and provide entertainment.

Her face, when it was fureſt, had been but as a marſhal to lodge the love of her in his mind, which now was ſo well placed as it needed no help of outward harbinger. Sidney.

To MA'RSHAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealouſies, and lack of ſome predominant deſire, that ſhould marſhal and put in order all the reſt, maketh any man's heart hard to find or ſound. Bacon.

It is as unconceivable how it ſhould be the directrix of ſuch intricate motions, as that a blind man ſhould marſhal an army. Glanville.

Anchiſes look'd not with ſo pleas'd a face,
In numb'ring o'er his future Roman race,
And marſhalling the heroes of his name,
As, in their order, next to light they came. Dryd.

2. To lead as a harbinger.

Thou marſhall'ſt me the way that I was going. Shakſpeare.

MA'RTIAL. adj. [martial, Fr. martialis, Lat.]

1. Warlike; fighting; given to war; brave.

Into my feeble breast
Come gently, but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troopes thou dost infest,
And hearts of great heroes dost enrage. Fairy Q.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them. Chapman.

It hath seldom been seen, that the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise; whereby it is manifest, that the northern tract of the world is the more martial region. Bacon.

His subjects call'd aloud for war;
But peaceful kings o'er martial people set,
Each other's poize and counterbalance are. Dry.

2. Having a warlike show; suiting war.

See
His thousands, in what martial equipage
They issue forth! Steel bows and shafts their arms,
Of equal dread in flight or in pursuit. Milton.

When our country's cause provokes to arms,
How martial musick every bosom warms. Pope.

3. Belonging to war; not civil; not according to the rules or practice of peaceable government.

Let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world. Shakspeare.

They proceeded in a kind of martial justice with enemies, offering them their law before they drew their sword. Bacon.

4. Borrowing qualities from the planet Mars.

The natures of the fixed stars are astrologically differenced by the planets, and esteemed martial or jovial according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown.

5. Having parts or properties of iron, which is called Mars by the chymists.

MA'RTIALIST. n. s. [from martial.] A warrior; a fighter.

Many brave adventurous spirits fell for love of her; amongst others the high-hearted martialist, who first lost his hands, then one of his chiefest limbs, and lastly his life. Howel.

MA'RTINGAL. n. s. [martingale, Fr.] A broad strap made fast to the girths under the belly of a horse, and runs between the two legs to fasten the other end, under the noseband of the bridle. Harris.

Martilmass beefe doth bear good tacke,
When countrey-folke do dainties lacke. Tusser.

MA'RTINET. } n. s. [martinet, French.]
MA'RTLET. } A kind of swallow.

This guest of Summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here. No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate. Shakspeare.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

MA'RTNETS. n. s. Small lines fastened to the leetch of the sail, to bring that part of the leetch which is next to the yard-arm close up to the yard, when the sail is to be furled. Bailey.

MA'RTYR. n. s. [μάρτυς; martyr, Fr.] One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn; if not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr. King Charles.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced. Brown.

Nearer heav'n his virtues shone more bright,
Like rising flames expanding in their height,
The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight. Dry.

To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ; but the witnessing of the truth then was so generally attended with persecution, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death. South's Sermons.

The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered. Addison.

Socrates,
Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thomson.

To MA'RTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put to death for virtue, or true profession.

2. To murder; to destroy.

You could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shaks.

If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.

Martyr'd with the gout. Pope.

MA'RTYRDOM. n. s. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr; the honour of a martyr; testimony born to truth by voluntary submission to death.

If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom? Hooker.

Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

Herod, whose unblest
Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness? tore
A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,
The blooms of martyrdom. Crashaw.

Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd, chief mast'ry to dissect
With long and tedious havock, fabled knights
In battles feign'd; the better fortitude
Of patience and heroick martyrdom
Unsung. Milton.

What mists of providence are these?
So saints, by supernatural pow'r set free,
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.

MARTYRO'LOGIST. n. s. [martyrologiste, Fr.] A writer of martyrology.

MARTYRO'LOGY. n. s. [martyrologe, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.] A register of martyrs.

In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Diocletian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out. Stillingfleet.

MA'RVEL. n. s. [merveille, Fr.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.

A marvel it were, if a man could espy, in the whole Scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

I am scarce in breath, my lord.
—No marvel, you have so bestirr'd your valour; you cowardly rascal! Shakspeare.

No marvel
My lord protector's hawks do towre so well. Shak.

MA'RVEL of Peru. A flower. Ainsw.

To MA'RVEL. v. n. [merveiller, Fr.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.

You make me marvel. Shakspeare.

Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. Shakspeare.

The army marvelled at it. Shakspeare.

The countries marvelled at thee for thy songs, proverbs, and parables. Ecclesiasticus.

MA'RVELLOUS. adj. [merveilleux, Fr.]

1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing.

She has a marvellous white hand, I must confess. Shakspeare.

This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. Psalms.

2. Surpassing credit.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

3. The marvellous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.

MA'RVELLOUSLY. adv. [from marvellous.] Wonderfully; strangely.

You look not well, seignior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd. Shaksp.

The encouragement of his too late successes, with which he was marvellously elated. Clarendon.

MA'RVELLOUSNESS. n. s. [from marvellous.] Wonderfulness; strangeness; astonishingness.

MA'SCULINE. adj. [masculin, Fr. masculinus, Lat.]

1. Male; not female.

Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long! Shak.

His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements, exercising their operation upon nature, being the feminine. Peacham.

O! why did God,
Creator wise, that peopled highest heav'n
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.

You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of Virtue. Addison.

3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.

MA'SCULINELY. adv. [from masculine.] Like a man.

Aurelia tells me, you have done most masculinely,
And play the orator. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

MA'SCULINENESS. n. s. [from masculine.] Mannishness; male figure or behaviour.

MASH. n. s. [masche, Dutch.]

1. The space between the threads of a net: commonly written mesh.

To defend against the stings of bees, have a net knit with so small mashes, that a bee cannot get through. Mortimer.

2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguished or confused body, [from mischen, Dut. to mix, or mascher, French.]

3. A mixture for a horse.

Put half a peck of ground malt into a pail, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm: this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour. Farrier's Dictionary.

When mares foal, they feed them with mashes, and other moist food. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To MASH. v. a. [mascher, Fr.]

1. To beat into a confused mass.

The pressure would be intolerable, and they would even mash themselves and all things else apieces. More.

To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without mashing the meat. Swift.

2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.

What you put in the [illegible] draw off, as [illegible] Mortimer's Husbandry.

MASK. n. s. [masque, French.]

1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.

Now Love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prisoner. Sidney.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And throw her sun-expelling mask away;
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shaksp.

Could we suppose that a mask represented ever so naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.

2. Any pretence or subterfuge.

Too plain thy nakedness of soul espy'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide,
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Prior.

3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night? Shaksp.

4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild bustle.

They in the end agreed,
That at a masque and common revelling,
Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed. Daniel.

This thought might lead me through this world's vain mask,
Content, though blind, had I no other guide. Milton.

5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick style, without attention to rules or probability.

Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peacham.

To MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]

1. To disguise with a mask or visor.

What will grow of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.

'Tis not my blood
Wherein thou see'st me masked. Shakspeare.

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakspeare.

The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw an antique statue masked, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the Eunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.

2. To cover; to hide.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

As when a piece of wanton lawn,
A thin aërial veil is drawn
O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
More sweetly shows the blushing bride:
A soul whose intellectual beams
No mists do mask, no lazy steams. Crashaw.

To MASK. v. n.

1. To revel; to play the mummer.

Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;
What masking stuff's here! Shakspeare.

Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame. Prior.

2. To be disguised any way.

MA'SKER. n. s. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.

Tell false Edward,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel it with him and his new bride. Shaks.

Let the scenes abound with light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down. Bacon.

The maskers come late, and I think will stay,
Like fairies, till the cock crow them away. Donne.

MA'SLIN. adj. [corrupted from miscellane.] Composed of various kinds; as maslin bread, made of wheat and rye.

MA'SON. n. s. [maçon, Fr. machio, low Latin.] A builder with stone.

Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth. Wotton.

A mason that makes a wall, meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work. More.

MA'SONRY. n. s. [maçonerie, French.] The craft or performance of a mason.

MASQUERA'DE. n. s. [from masque, Fr.]

1. A diversion in which the company is masked.

What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treach'rous friend, and daring spark,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark? Pope.

2. Disguise.

I was upon the frolick this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest, is forced to gain admittance in disguise, and court us in masquerade. Felton.

To MASQUERA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go in disguise.

A freak took an ass in the head, and he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin. L'Estrange.

2. To assemble in masks.

I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.

MASQUERA'DER. n. s. [from masquerade.] A person in a mask.

The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masqueraders under the visor of friends. L'Estrange.

MASS. n. s. [masse, Fr. massa, Lat.]

1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.

If it were not for these principles, the bodies of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton's Opticks.

Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outsides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward's Natural History.

2. A large quantity.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakspeare.

He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh.

He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army. Davies on Ireland.

3. Bulk; vast body.

The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot.

This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shakspeare.

4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.

The whole knowledge of groupes, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the sight. Dryden.

At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;
They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.

Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison.

5. Gross body; the general; the bulk.

Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon.

Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal Mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryd.

The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curio. Swift.

If there is not sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

6. [missa, Lat.] The service of the Romish church.

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert herein. Peacham on Drawing.

He infers, that then Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.

To MASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.

Their massing furniture they took from the law, lest having an altar and a priest, they should want vestments. Hooker.

To MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.

They feared the French might, with filling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven. Hayward.

MA'SSACRE. n. s. [massacre, Fr. from mazzare, Italian.]

1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.

Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men. Milton.

Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre, what was a war. Dryden.

2. Murder.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakspeare.

To MA'SSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, Fr. from the noun.] To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family. Shakspeare.

Christian religion, now crumbled into fractions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not countermine us, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love. Decay of Piety.

After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterbury.

MA'SSICOT. n. s. [Fr.] Ceruss calcined by a moderate degree of fire: of this there are three sorts, arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold coloured massicot still more. Trevoux.

MA'SSINESS. } n. s. [from massy, massive.] Weight; bulk; ponderousness.
MA'SSIVENESS. }

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hakewill.

MA'SSIVE. } adj. [massif, Fr.] Heavy; weighty; ponderous; bulky; continuous.
MA'SSY. }

If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine. Government of the Tongue.

No sideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes dress'd. Dryden.

The more gross and massive parts of the terrel-

trial glass, the strata of stone, owe their order to the deluge. Woodward.

If these humors or glassy were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton.

Th' intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar
The floods descending, and the watery war. Pope.

MAST. n. s. [mæst, mæst, Fr. mæte, Sax.]

1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen. Shakspeare.

He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden.

2. The fruit of the oak and beech. It has in this sense no plural termination.

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips:
The bountcous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Shakspeare.

Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon.

When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some mast. L'Estrange.

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefits. Temple.

Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they browze,
And their broad fins support the bough. Dryd.

MA'STED. adj. [from mast.] Furnished with masts.

MA'STER. n. s. [meester, Dutch; maître, Fr. magister, Lat.]

1. One who has servants: opposed to man or servant.

But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are your's, my lord. Shakspeare.

Take up thy master. Shakspeare.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it;
The boy, his clerk, begg'd mine;

Me'asurable. adj. [from measure.]

1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.

God's eternal duration is permanent and invisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley.

2. Moderate; in small quantity.

Me'asurableness. n. s. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.

Me'asurably. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.

Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart. Ecclesiasticus

ME'ASURE. n. s. [mesure, Fr. mensura, Lat.]

1. That by which any thing is measured.

> A taylor's news,
> Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
> Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
> Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
> Told of many a thousand. Shakspeare

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.

All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measures. Holder.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetick and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.

He lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other mens eyes and tongues. Taylor.

God's goodness is the measure of his providence. More.

I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville's Scepsis.

3. Proportion; quantity settled.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.

I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity: as, a measure of wine.

> Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
> The table round. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

5. Sufficient quantity.

> I'll never pause again,
> Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
> Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaks.

6. Allotment; portion allotted.

> Good Kent, how shall I live and work
> To match thy goodness? life will be too short
> And every measure fail me. Shakspeare.

We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Corinthians.

> If else thou seek'st
> Ought, not surpassing human measure, say. Milton.

Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid stoick, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson.

7. Degree; quantity.

I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Abbot.

There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.

The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and continuation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet's Theory.

8. Proportionate time; musical time.

> Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
> And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.

9. Motion harmonically regulated.

> My legs can keep no measure in delight,
> When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
> Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport. Shakspeare.

> As when the stars in their æthereal race,
> At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
> From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
> And move in measures of their former dance. Dryden.

10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and anchentry. Shakspeare.

> Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
> Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
> Our dreadful marches to delightful measures. Shak.

11. Moderation; not excess.

> O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstasy;
> In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess;
> I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
> For fear I surfeit. Shakspeare.

Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isaiah.

12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is Μετρον

> Τρεῖς ἐτίαν δεκάδας τριάδας δύο, μέτρον ἴθηκαν
> Ἡμεῖίρης βιότης μάνλις; α.θέρια.
> Ἀριθμαι τύτοισιν.

Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psalms.

13. Any thing adjusted.

Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards. Smallridge's Sermons

14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.

I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measure, rather than the height of thought. Dryden

The numbers themselves, though of the heroick measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pope.

15. Tune; proportionate notes.

> The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
> Which thither came to hear their musick sweet,
> And to the measures of their melodies
> Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet. Spens.

16. Mean of action; mean to an end. The original of this phrase refers to the necessity of measuring the ground upon which any structure is to be raised, or any distant effect to be produced, as in shooting at a mark. Hence he that proportioned his means to his end was said to take right measures. By degrees measures and means were confounded, and any thing done for an end, and sometimes any transaction absolutely, is called a measure, with no more propriety than if, because an archer might be said to have taken wrong measures when his mark was beyond his reach, we should say that it was a bad measure to use a heavy arrow.

His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.

17. To have hard measure; to be hardly treated.

To Me'asure. v. a. [mesurer, Fr. mensuro, Lat.]

1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Cheronea, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow he would find it no longer than it was before his victory. Bacon.

2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.

> A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
> To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shaks.

> I'll tell thee all my whole device
> At the park gate; and therefore haste away.
> For we must measure twenty miles to-day. Shaks.

> The vessel ploughs the sea,
> And measures back with speed her former way. Dry.

3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.

> Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite
> Thy pow'r! What thought can measure thee, or tongue > Relate thee? Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To adjust; to proportion.

To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Taylor.

Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange, that he measures the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.

5. To mark out in stated quantities.

What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Spectator.

6. To allot or distribute by measure.

> So far, but that the best are meas'ring casts,
> Their emulation and their pastime lasts. Waller.

Meat. n. s. [met, French.]

1. Flesh to be eaten.

To his father he sent ten she asses laden with corn, and bread, and meat for his father by the way. Genesis.

Carnivoræ, and birds of prey, are no good meat; but the reason is, rather the cholerick nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh, for pewets and ducks feed upon flesh, and yet are good meat. Bacon's Natural History.

There was a multitude of excises; as, the vectigal macelli, a tax upon meat. Arbuthnot.

2. Food in general.

> Never words were musick to thine ear,
> And never meat sweet-favour'd in thy taste,
> Unless I spake or carv'd. Shakspeare.

Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both. 1 Corinthians.

When the melting fire burneth, the fire cauſeth the waters to boil. Iſaiah.

This price, which is given above the value of the ſilver in our coin, is given only to preſerve our coin from being melted down. Locke.

The rock's high ſummit in the temple's ſhade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating ſtorm invade. Pope.

If your butter when melted taſtes of braſs, it is your maſter's fault, who will not allow you a ſilver ſaucepan. Swift.

2. To diſſolve; to break in pieces.

To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its firſt principles; and then to obſerve how the divine wiſdom wrought all theſe things into that beautiful compoſition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.

3. To ſoften to love or tenderneſs.

The mighty maſter ſmil'd to ſee
That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred ſound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryden.
Alas! the ſtory melts away my ſoul. Addiſon.

4. To waſte away.

Thou would'ſt have plung'd thyſelf
In general riot, melted down thy youth
In different beds of luſt. Shakſpeare.

To MELT. v. n.

1. To become liquid; to diſſolve; to be made fluid.

Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Pſalms.

The roſe is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet ſweet, but quickly paſt the prime;
White lilies hang their heads and ſoon decay,
And whiter ſnow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

2. To be ſoftened to pity, or any gentle paſſion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.

I melt, and am not
Of ſtronger earth than others. Shakſpeare.

Dighton and Forreſt;

ME'MORABLE. adj. [memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.

Nothing I ſo much delight to recount, as the memorable friendſhip that grew betwixt the two princes. Sidney.

From this deſire, that main deſire proceeds,
Which all men have ſurviving fame to gain,
By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds,
For ſhe that this deſires doth ſtill remain. Davies.

Dares Ulyſſes for the prize contend,
In ſight of what he durſt not once defend;
But baſely fled that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey?

ME'MORABLY. adv. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.

MEMORANDUM. n. s. [Lat.] A note to help the memory.

I refolved to new pave every ſtreet, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly. Guardian.

Nature's fair table-book, our tender ſouls,
We ſcrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the ſchools. Swift.

MEMO'RIAL. adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Latin.]

1. Preſervative of memory.

Thy maſter now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and ſighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kiſſes to it. Shakſpeare.

May I, at the concluſion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inſcription memorial of it. Broome.

ME'TEOR. n. s. [meteore, Fr. μετεωρα.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature.

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face? Shaksp.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland, for there has the like meteor strong influence before. Bacon's Henry VII.

These burning fits but meteors be,
Whose matter in thee soon is spent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament. Donne.

Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene. Dryd.

Why was I raised the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar? Dryden.

O poet thou hadst been dircreter,
Hanging the monarch's hat, to light,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rave, and die. Prior.

—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.
—Nay then two treys: and if you grow so nice,
Methegelin, wort, and malmsey. Shakspeare.

T' allay the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new methegelin join. Dryden.

METHI'NKS. verb impersonal. [me and thinks. This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I.] I think; it seems to me; mesceems. See MESEEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used likewise mesceems.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous. Spenser on Ireland.

If he choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it. Dryden.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Spectator.

Methinks already I your tears survey. Pope.

METHOD. n. s. [methode, Fr. μεθοδος.] The placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end. Watts.

To see wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill, the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties. Hooker.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your sconce. Shakf.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools. Locke.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain. Spect.

METHO'DICAL. adj. [methodique, Fr. from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author. Spectator.

Let me appear, great sir, I pray,
Methodical in what I say. Addison.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of mechanicable confusion, but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

METHO'DICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dry.

To METHO'DISE. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolved his utmost vengeance to defer,
The royal spy return'd again unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,
And methodize revenge. Dryden's Dioceae.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Spectator.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critick. Spectator.

Thoſe rules of old diſcover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature ſtill, but nature methodis'd. Pope

ME'THODIST. n. ſ. [from method.]

METHO'UGHT, the preterit of methinks. [See MITHINKS and MISEEMS.] I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has meſeemed, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from meſeems.

Methought, a ſerpent eat my heart away,
And you ſat ſmiling at his cruel prey Shakſpeare.

Since I fought
By pray'r th' offended deity t' appeaſe;
Kneel'd, and before him humbl'd all my heart,
Methought, I ſaw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: perſuaſion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd
Home to my breaſt; and to my memory
His promiſe, "That thy ſeed ſhall bruiſe our foe." Milton.

In theſe
I found not what, methought, I wanted ſtill, Milton.

Methought I ſtood on a wide river's bank,
Which I muſt needs o'erpaſs, but knew not how. Dryden.

In humble dales is footing faſt,
The trode is not ſo tickle,
And though one fall through heedleſs haſte,
Yet is his miſs not mickle. Spenſer.
Many a little makes a mickle. Camden.
If I to-day die not with Frenchmens rage,
To-morrow I ſhall die with mickle age. Shakſp.
O, mickle is the pow'rful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, ſtones, and their true qualities. Shakſpeare.
All this tract that fronts the falling ſun,
A noble peer, of mickle truſt and power,
Has in his charge. Milton.

MICROCO'SM. n. ſ. [μικρὸς and κόσμος.] The little world. Man is ſo called as being imagined, by ſome fanciful philoſophers, to have in him ſomething analogous to the four elements.

You ſee this in the map of my microcoſm. Shak.
She to whom this world muſt itſelf refer,
As ſuburbs, or the microcoſm of her;
She, ſhe is dead; ſhe's dead, when thou know'ſt this,
Thou know'ſt how lame a creeple this world is. Don.
As in this our microcoſm, the heart
Heat, ſpirit, motions gives to every part;
So Rome's victorious influence did diſperſe
All her own virtues through the univerſe. Denham.
Philoſophers ſay, that man is a microcoſm, or little world, reſembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politick. Swift.

MI'CROGRAPHY. n. ſ. [μικρὸς and γράφω.] The deſcription of the parts of ſuch very ſmall objects as are diſcernible only with a microſcope.

The honey bag is the ſtomach, which they always fill to ſatisfy and to ſpare, vounting up the greater part of the honey to be kept againſt winter; a curious deſcription and figure of the ſting ſee in Mr. Hook's micrography. Grew.

MICRO'METER. n. ſ. [μικρὸς and μέτρον; micrometre, Fr.] An inſtrument contrived to meaſure ſmall ſpaces.

MI'CROSCOPE. n. ſ. [μικρὸς and σκοπέω; microſcope, Fr.] An optick inſtrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwiſe be ſeen.

If the eye were ſo acute as to rival the fineſt microſcopes, and to diſcern the ſmalleſt hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curſe, and not a bleſſing to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed, the moſt finely poliſhed ſurface would be uneven and rough; the ſight of our own ſelves would affright us, the ſmoothest ſkin would be beſet all over with ragged ſcales and briſtly hairs. Bentley.
The critick eye, that microſcope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad.

MICROSCO'PICAL. } MICROSCO'PICK. } adj. [from microſcope.]

1. Made by a microſcope.

Make microſcopical obſervations of the figure and bulk of the conſtituent parts of all fluids. Arbuth.

2. Aſſiſted by a microſcope.

Evading even the microſcopick eye!
Full nature ſwarms with life Thomſon.

3. Reſembling a microſcope.

Why has not man a microſcopick eye?
For this plain reaſon, Man is not a fly;
Say what the uſe, were finer opticks given,
T'inſpect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]

1. Middle; equally between two extremes.

No more the mounting larks, while Daphne ſings,
Shall, lifting in mid air, ſuſpend their wings. Pope.

Why in the eaſt
Darkneſs ere day's mid-courſe and morning light,
More orient in yon weſtern cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.

MI'DDAY. adj. [mid and day.] Meridional; being at noon.

Who ſhoots at the mid-day ſun, though he be ſure he ſhall never hit the mark, yet as ſure he is he ſhall ſhoot higher than he who aims but at a buſh. Sidney.
His ſparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day ſun fierce bent againſt their faces. Shakſpeare.
Did he not lead you through the mid-day ſun,
And clouds of duſt; Did not his temples glow
In the ſame ſultry winds and ſcorching heats? Add.

MI'DDAY. n. ſ. Noon; meridian.

Who have before, or ſhall write after thee,
Their works, though toughly laboured, will be
Like infancy or age to man's firm ſtay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Donne.

MI'DDEST. ſuperl. of mid, middeſt, midſt.

Yet the ſtout fairy 'mongſt the middeſt crowd,
Thought all their glory vain in nightly view. Spen.

MI'DDLE. adj. [middle, Sax.]

1. Equally diſtant from the two extremes.

The loweſt virtues draw praiſe from the common people; the middle virtues work in them aſtoniſhment; but of the higheſt virtues they have no ſenſe. Bacon.
A middle ſtation of life, within reach of thoſe conveniences which the lower orders of mankind muſt neceſſarily want, and yet without embarraſſment of greatneſs. Rogers.
To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle-ſized brigantines. Arbuthnot.

They never ſtand, but lie or ſit;
And yet ſo foul, that whole is in,
Is to the middle leg in priſon. Hudibras

2. The time that paſſes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.

The cauſes and deſigns of an action are the beginning; the effects of theſe cauſes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of theſe deſigns are the middle; and the unravelling and reſolution of theſe difficulties are the end. Dryden.

MIDDLE-AGED. adj. [middle and age.] Placed about the middle of life.

A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown, took a fancy to marry two wives. L'Eſtrange.
The middle-aged ſupport laſting the beſt, becauſe of the oily parts abounding in the blood Arbuth.
I found you a very young man, and left you a middle-aged one; you knew me a middle-aged man, and now I am an old one. Swift.

MI'DDLEMOST. adj. [from middle.] Being in the middle.

Why have not ſome beaſts more than four feet, ſuppoſe ſix, and the middlemoſt ſhorter than the reſt? More.
The outmoſt fringe vaniſhed firſt and the middlemoſt next, and the innermoſt laſt. Newton.
The outward ſtars, with their ſyſtems of planets, muſt neceſſarily have deſcended towards the middlemoſt ſyſtem of the univerſe, whither all would be moſt ſtrongly attracted from all parts of infinite ſpace. Bentley.

MI'DDLING. adj. [from middle.]

1. Of middle rank; of condition equally remote from high and low.

A middling ſort of a man, left well enough to paſs by his father, could never think he had enough ſo long as any man had more. L'Eſtrange.

2. Of moderate ſize; having moderate qualities of any kind.

The bigneſs of a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of middling lungs will eaſily extend. Grount.
Longinus preferred the ſublime genius that ſometimes errs, to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but ſeldom riſes to any excellence. Dryden.

MIDGE. n. ſ. [miege, Sax.] A gnat.

MID-HEAVEN. n. ſ. [mid and heaven.] The middle of the ſky.

But the hot hell that always in him burns,
Though in mid-heaven, ſoon ended his delight. Mil.

MI'DLAND. adj. [mid and land.]

1. That is remote from the coaſt.

The ſame name is given to the inlanders, or midland inhabitants of this iſland, by Cæſar. Brown.

The various dialects of the Engliſh in the north and weſt, render their expreſſions many times unintelligible to the other, and both ſcarce intelligible to the midland. Hale.

2. Surrounded by land; mediterranean.

There was the Plymouth ſquadron now come in,
Which twice on Biſcay's working bay had been,
And on the midland ſea the French had aw'd. Dry.

MI'DLEG. n. ſ. [mid and leg.] Middle of the leg.

He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white ſatten, hoſe coats to the midleg, and ſtockings of white ilk. Bacon.

MI'DMOST. adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemoſt: this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they ſeem to have a ſuperlative degree.] Middle.

Now van to van the foremoſt ſquadrons meet,
The midmoſt battles cloſing up behind. Dryden.
Hear humbly if I repine
At fate's unequal laws; and at the clue,
Which, ne'erleſs in length, the midmoſt ſiſter draws. Dryden.
What dulneſs dropt among her ſons impreſt,
Like motion, from one circle to the reſt;
So from the midmoſt the infuſion ſpreads
Round, and more round o'er all the ſea of heads. Pope.

MI'DNIGHT. n. ſ. [mid and night. Milton ſeems to have accented the laſt ſyllable.] The noon of night; the depth of night; twelve at night.

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; to that to go to bed after midnight, is to go betimes Shakſpeare.
By night he fled, and at midnight return'd
From compaſſing the earth, cautious of day. Milt.
After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had paſt. Stillingfleet.
To all the dark midnight of popery there were but ſome glimpſes of light, ſome miracles that ſerved to give teſtimony to the truth. Atterbury.
They could not watch at home the dog-ſtar had at midnight or ruſticum in Rome when Julius Cæſar was ſlain. Watts.

MI'DNIGHT. adj. Being in the middle of the night.

How now, you ſecret, black and midnight hags!
What is't you do? Shakſpeare.
I hope my midnight ſtudies, to make our countries flouriſh in myſterious and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects. Bacon.

Some ſolitary cloiſter will I chuſe,
Caſt off my attire, and there ſhall be my ſleep,
Broke by the melancholy midnight bell Dryden.

MI'DRIFF. n. ſ. [midhnipe, Sax.] The diaphragm.

The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities; the thorax and abdomen: it is compoſed of two muſcles, the firſt and ſuperior of theſe ariſes from the ſternum, and the ends of the laſt ribs on each ſide. The ſecond and inferior muſcle comes from the vertebræ of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right ſide comes from the firſt, ſecond, and third vertebræ of the loins: that on the left ſide is ſomewhat ſhorter; and both theſe productions join and make the lower part of the midriff. Quincy.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a ſtone
That beat out life. Milton.

In the gullet where it perforateth the midriff, the carneous fibres of that muſcular part are inflected. Ray.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale. Prior.

MI'LDEW. n. s. [milbeape, Sax.]

Mildew is a disease in plants, caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils the plant: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the spring and summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun nor wind. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the east, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are induced thereto. Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words. Fairf.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Soon blasting mildews blacken'd all the grain. Dryden.

To MI'LDEW. v. a. To taint with mildew.

Than prais'd for harmful mildneſs. Shakſpeare.

MI'LKY-WAY. n. ſ. [milky and way.] The galaxy.

The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompaſſing the whole heavens, and extending itſelf in ſome places with a double path, but for the moſt part with a ſingle one. Some of the ancients, as Ariſtotle, imagined that this path conſiſted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the teleſcopical obſervations of this age, it hath been diſcovered to conſiſt of an innumerable quantity of fixed ſtars, different in ſituation and magnitude, from the confuſed mixture of which light its whole colour is ſuppoſed to be occaſioned. Harris.

Nor need we with a prying eye ſurvey
The diſtant ſkies to find the milky-way.
It forcibly intrudes upon our ſight. Creech.
How many ſtars there muſt be, a naked eye may give us ſome faint glimpſe, but much more a good teleſcope, directed towards that region of the ſky called the milky-way. Cheyne.

Juſtice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with preſſed and heaped, and even over-enlarged meaſure. Hooker.

MIND. n. ſ. [ᵹemynd, Sax.]

1. The intelligent power.

> I am a very fooliſh fond old man;
> I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakſpeare.

This word being often uſed for the ſoul giving life, is attributed abuſively to madmen, when we ſay that they are of a diſtracted mind, inſtead of a broken underſtanding: which word, mind, we uſe alſo for opinion; as, I am of this or that mind: and ſometimes for mens conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honeſt mind, or a man of a juſt mind: ſometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's ſake: ſometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without diſcourſe: oftentimes for ſpirits, angels, and intelligences: but as it is uſed in the proper ſignification, including both the underſtanding agent and paſſible, it is deſcribed to be a pure, ſimple, ſubſtantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his firſt object, or more at large thus; a part or particle of the ſoul, whereby it doth underſtand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from paſſion coming from without, and apt to be diſſevered as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

> I thought th' eternal Mind
> Had made us maſters. Dryden.

2. Intellectual capacity.

> We ſay that learning's endleſs, and blame fate
> For not allowing life a longer date,
> He did the utmoſt bounds of knowledge find,
> He found them not ſo large as was his mind. Cowley.

3. Liking; choice; inclination; propenſion; affection.

Our queſtion is, Whether all be ſin which is done without direction by Scripture, and not whether the Iſraelites did at any time amiſs, by following their own minds without aſking counſel of God? Hooker.

> We will conſider of your ſuit,
> And come ſome other time to know our mind. Shak.
> Being ſo hard to me that brought your mind,
> I fear ſhe'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Shakſpeare.
> I will have nothing elſe but only this;
> And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shakſpeare.

Be of the ſame mind one toward another. Rom.

Haſt thou a wife after thy mind? forſake her not. Eccleſiaſticus.

They had a mind to French Britain, but they have let fall their bit. Bacon.

> Sudden mind aroſe
> In Adam, not to let th' occaſion paſs,
> Given him by this great conference, to know
> Of things above this world. Milton.

He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.

All the arguments to a good life will be very inſignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remiſſion of ſins may be had upon ſuch cheap terms. Tillotſon.

Suppoſe that after eight years peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make? Addis.

4. Thoughts; sentiments.

Th'ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind expreſt,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the reſt.
Dryden.

5. Opinion.

The earth was not of my mind,
If you ſuppoſe, as fearing you, it ſhook. Shakſpeare.

Theſe men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite ſpace, becauſe God has exiſted from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite ſpace. Locke.

The gods permitting traitors to ſucceed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Granville.

6. Memory; remembrance.

The king knows their diſpoſition; a ſmall touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will thereon ſet
His tripled-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton.

Theſe, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to ſing. Dryden.

To MI'NORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.] To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.

This doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minorates the object. Glanville.

MINORA'TION. n. f. [from minorate.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not admitted.

Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone, whose efficiences are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.

MINO'RITY. n. f. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Lat.]

1. The state of being under age.

I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakspeare.

He is young, and his minority
Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shaksp.

These changes in religion should be final, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or no. Hayward's Edward VI.

Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon.

If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet.

Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.

2. The state of being less.

From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or smallness in the exclusion. Brown.

3. The smaller number: as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.

MI'NOTAUR. n. f. [minotaure, Fr. minos and taurus, Lat.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus' labyrinth.

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth,
There minotaurs, and ugly treasons lurk. Shaksp.

MI'NSTER. n. f. [minsterpe, Sax.] A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.

MI'NSTREL. n. f. [menestril, Spanish; menestrallus, low Lat.] A musician; one who plays upon instruments.

Hark how the minstrels 'gin to thrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.

I will give you the minstrel.
—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shakf.

I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandys.

These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known. Dryd.

Often our seers and poets have confess'd,
That musick's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.

MI'NSTRELSEY. n. f. [from minstrel.]

1. Musick; instrumental harmony.

Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the word applaud his minstrelsey. Davies.

That loving wretch that swears,
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsey, the spheres. Donne.

I began,
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsey,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton.

2. A number of musicians.

Minstring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hast thou arm'd the minstrelsey of heaven. Milton.

MINT. n. f. [minte, Sax. menthe, Fr. mentha, Lat.] A plant.

Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint,
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.

MINT. n. f. [munte, Dutch; mynetian, to coin, Saxon.]

1. The place where money is coined.

What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals. Addison.

2. Any place of invention.

A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shaksp.

As the mints of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party. Addison.

To MINT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To coin; to stamp money.

Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to set the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To invent; to forge.

Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted. Bacon.

MI'NTAGE. n. f. [from mint.]

1. That which is coined or stamped.

Its pleading poiſon
The viſage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeneſs of a beaſt
Fixes inſtead, unmouldling reaſon's mintage
Character'd in the face. Milton.

2. The duty paid for coining. Ainſworth.

MI'NTER. n. ſ. [from mint.] Coiner.

Sterling ought to be of pure ſilver called leaſt ſilver, the minter muſt add other weight, if the ſilver be not pure. Camden.

MI'NTMAN. n. ſ. [mint and man.] One ſkilled in coinage.

He that thinketh Spain to be ſome great overmatch for this eſtate, is no good mintman; but takes greatneſs of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after their intrinſick value. Bacon.

MI'NTMASTER. n. ſ. [mint and maſter.]

1. One who preſides in coinage.

That which is coined, as mintmaſters confeſſed, is alloyed with about a twelfth part of copper. Boyle.

2. One who invents.

The great mintmaſters of theſe terms, the ſchoolmen and metaphyſicians, have wherewithal to content him. Locke.

MI'NUET. n. ſ. [menuet, Fr.] A ſtately regular dance.

MI'NUM. n. ſ.

1. [With printers.] A ſmall ſort of printing letter.

2. [With muſicians.] A note of ſlow time, two of which make a ſemibrief, as two crotchets make a minum; two quavers a crotchet, and two ſemiquavers a quaver. Bailey.

He's the courageous captain of compliments; he fights as you ſing prickſongs, keeps time, diſtance, and proportion; reſts his minum, one, two, and the third in your boſom. Shakſpeare.

MINU'TE. adj. [minutus, Lat.] Small; little; ſlender; ſmall in bulk; ſmall in conſequence.

Some minute philoſophers pretend,
That with our days our pains and pleaſures end. Denham.

Such an univerſal ſuperintendency has the eye and hand of Providence over all, even the moſt minute and inconſiderable things. South.

Into ſmall parts the wond'rous ſtone divide,
Ten thouſand leſs minuteſt ſize expreſs
The ſame propenſion which the huge poſſeſs. Blackmore.

The ferum is attenuated by circulation, ſo as to paſs into the minuteſt channels, and become fit nutriment for the body. Arbuthnot.

In all diviſions we ſhould conſider the larger and more immediate parts of the ſubject, and not divide it at once into the more minute and remote parts. Watts' Logick.

MI'NUTE. n. ſ. [minutum, Latin.]

1. The ſixtieth part of an hour.

This man ſo complete,
Who was enroll'd 'mongſt wonders, and when we,
Almoſt with ſtar'ning raviſh'd, could not find
His hour of ſpeech a minute. Shakſpeare.

2. Any ſmall ſpace of time.

They walk'd about me ev'ry minute while;
And if I did but ſtir out of my bed,
Ready they were to ſhoot me to the heart. Shakſpeare.

Tell her, that I ſome certainty may bring;
I go this minute to attend the king. Dryden.

3. The firſt draught of any agreement in writing. This is common in the Scottiſh law: as, have you made a minute of that contract?

To MI'NUTE. v. a. [minuter, Fr.] To ſet down in ſhort hints.

I no ſooner heard this critick talk of my works, but I minuted what he had ſaid, and reſolved to enlarge the plan of my ſpeculations. Spectator.

MI'NUTE-BOOK. n. ſ. [minute and book.] Book of ſhort hints.

MI'NUTE-GLASS. n. ſ. [minute and glaſs.] Glaſs of which the ſand meaſures a minute.

MINU'TELY. adv. [from minute.] To a ſmall point; exactly; to the leaſt part; nicely.

In this poſture of mind it was impoſſible for him to keep that ſlow pace, and obſerve minutely that order of ranging all he ſaid, from which reſults an obvious perſpicuity. Locke.
Change of night and day,
And of the ſeaſons ever ſtealing round,
Minutely faithful. Thomſon's Summer.

MI'NUTELY. adv. [from minute, the ſubſtantive.]

1. Every minute; with very little time intervening.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, reſounding for ever in our ears? As if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no reſt in their ſins, no quiet from Chriſt's importunity till they ariſe from ſo mortiferous a ſtate. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. [In the following paſſage it ſeems rather to be an adjective, as hourly is both the adverb and adjective.] Happening every minute.

Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach,
Thoſe he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

MINU'TENESS. n. ſ. [from minute.] Smallneſs; exility; inconſiderableneſs.

To hold the door, but now ſets up for man. Dryden.

MI'RACLE. n. ſ. [miracle, Fr. miraculum, Latin.]

1. A wonder; ſomething above human power.

Nothing almoſt ſees miracles
But miſery. Shakſpeare's King Lear.
Virtuous and holy, choſen from above,
To work exceeding miracles on earth. Shakſpeare.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me. Shakſpeare.

2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in atteſtation of ſome truth.

The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain oſtentation of power, and to raiſe unprofitable amazement; but for the real benefit and advantage of men, by feeding the hungry, healing all ſorts of diſeaſes, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead. Bentley.

MIRACULOUS. adj. [miraculeux, Fr. from miracle.] Done by miracle; produced by miracles; effected by power more than natural.

Artificial progreſſion might eaſily demonſtrate how faſt mankind would increaſe, overpaſſing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Iſraelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from ſeventy unto ſix hundred thouſand able men. Raleigh's Eſſays.
Reſtore this day, for thy great name,
Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.
Why this ſtrength
Miraculous yet remaining in thoſe locks?
His might conſiſted in theſe treſſes ſtrength. Milton.
At the firſt planting of the chriſtian religion, God was pleaſed to accompany it with a miraculous power. Tillotſon.

MIRA'CULOUSLY. adv. [from miraculous.] By miracle; by power above that of nature.

It was a ſingular providence of God, to draw thoſe northern heathen nations down into thoſe chriſtian parts, where they might receive chriſtianity, and to mingle nations ſo remote miraculouſly, to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenſer on Ireland.
Turnus was to be ſlain that very day, and Æneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in ſingle combat, unleſs his hurt had been miraculouſly healed. Dryden.

MIRA'CULOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from miraculous.] The ſtate of being effected by miracle; ſuperiority to natural power.

MIRADOR'. n. ſ. [Spaniſh, from mirar, to look.] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies ſee ſhows.

Mean time your valiant ſon, who had before
Gain'd fame, rode round, to ev'ry mirador;
Beneath each lady's ſtand a ſtop he made,
And bowing, took th' applauſes which they paid. Dryden.

MIRE. n. ſ. [moer, Dut.] Mud; dirt at the bottom of water.

He his rider from her lofty ſteed
Would have caſt down, and trod in dirty mire. Spenſer.
Here's that, which is too weak to be a ſinner, honeſt water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakſpeare's Timon of Athens.
I'm Ralph himſelf, your truſty ſquire,
Wh' has dragg'd your doughp out o' th' mire. Hudibras.
I appeal to any man's reaſon, whether it be not better that there ſhould be a diſtinction of land and ſea, than that all ſhould be mire and water. More.
Now plung'd in mire, now by ſharp brambles torn. Roſcommon.

To MIRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To whelm in the mud; to ſoil with mud.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's iſſue at my gates?
Who ſneered thus, and mir'd with infamy,
I might have ſaid no part of it is mine. Shakſpeare.

MIRE. n. ſ. [myr, Welſh; myra, Saxon; mier, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.

MI'RINESS. n. ſ. [from miry.] Dirtineſs; fulneſs of mire.

MI'RROR. n. ſ. [miroir, French; mirar, Spaniſh, to look.]

1. A looking-glaſs; any thing which exhibits repreſentations of objects by reflection.

And in his waters which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the cryſtal bright. Spenſer.
That pow'r which gave me eyes the world to view,
To view myſelf infuſ'd an inward light,
Whereby my ſoul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect ſight. Davies.

Leſs bright the moon,
But opposite in levell'd weſt was ſet
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
Mirroir of poets, mirroir of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy ſtage,
Pleas'd and diſpleas'd with her own faults, endures
A remedy like thoſe whom muſick cures. Waller.
By chance he ſpy'd a mirroir while he ſpoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wond'ring, he ſaw his features and his hue
So much were chang'd, that ſcarce himſelf he knew.
Dryden.
Late as I rang'd the cryſtal wilds of air,
In the clear mirroir of thy ruling ſtar,
I ſaw, alas! ſome dread event depend. Pope.

2. It is uſed for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; as, men look in a glaſs to adjuſt their mien or dreſs; an exemplar; an archetype.

The works of nature are no leſs exact, than if ſhe did both behold and ſtudy how to expreſs ſome abſolute ſhape or mirror always preſent before her.
Hooker.
O goddeſs, heavenly bright,
Mirrour of grace and majeſty divine. Fairy Q.
How far'ſt thou, mirror of all martial men
Shakſpeare.
Mirroir of ancient faith in early youth. Dryden.

To give a kingdom for a mirth, to ſit,
And keep the turn of tippling with a ſlave. Shakſ.
His eye begets occaſion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jeſt. Shakſpeare.
Moſt of the appearing mirth in the world is not mirth but art: the wounded ſpirit is not ſeen, but walks under a diſguiſe. South.
With genial joy to warm the ſoul,
Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inſpiring bowl. Pope.

MI'RTHFUL. adj. [mirth and full.] Merry; gay; cheerful.
No ſimple word,
That ſhall be utter'd at our mirthful board,
Shall make us ſad next morning. Ben Jonſon.
The feaſt was ſerv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleaſure went the mirthful round.
Prior.

MI'RTHLESS. adj. [from mirth.] Joyleſs; cheerleſs.

MI'RY. adj. [from mire.]

1. Deep in mud; muddy.
Thou ſhould'ſt have heard how her horſe fell, and ſhe under her horſe: thou ſhould'ſt have heard in how miry a place, how ſhe was bemoiled. Shakſ.
All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by ſickneſs or by age, went into vaſt caves under ground, all dark and miry, full of noiſome creatures, and there grovelled in endleſs ſtench and miſery. Temple.
Deep, through a miry lane ſhe pick'd her way,
Above her ancle roſe the chalky clay. Gay.
So have I ſeen ill-coupled hounds
Drag diff'rent ways in miry grounds. Swift.

2. Conſiſting of mire.
Shall thou and I ſit round about ſome fountain
Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,
How they are ſtain'd like meadows, yet not dry,
With miry ſlime left on them by a flood? Shakſp.

MIS, an inſeparable particle uſed in compoſition to mark an ill ſenſe, or depravation of the meaning: as, chance, luck; miſchance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miſcomputation, falſe reckoning; to like, to be pleaſed; to miſlike, to be offended; from mes in Teutonick and French, uſed in the ſame ſenſe. To MISBECO'ME. v. a. [mis and become.] Not to become; to be unſeemly; not to ſuit.
Father ſhe has a poſſibility in that which I think impoſſible, or elſe impoſſible loves need not miſbecome me. Sidney.
What to the dauphin from England?
—Scorn and defiance, ſlight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not miſbecome
The mighty ſender. Shakſpeare.
That boldneſs which lads get amongſt play-fellows, has ſuch a mixture of rudeneſs and ill-turned confidence, that thoſe miſbecoming and diſingenuous ways of ſhifting in the world muſt be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.
Portius, thou may'ſt rely upon my conduct;
Thy father will not act what miſbecomes him.
Addiſon.

MISBEGO'T, } adj. [begot or begotten
MISBEGO'TTEN, } with mis.] Unlawfully or irregularly begotten.
Contaminated, baſe,
And miſbegotten blood, I ſpill of thine. Shakſpeare.
Your words have taken ſuch pains, as if they labour'd
To bring manſlaughter into form, ſet quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour miſbegot, and came into the world
When ſects and factions were but newly born.
Shakſpeare.
The miſbegotten infant grows,
And, ripe for birth, diſtends with deadly throes
The ſwelling rind, with unavailing ſtrife,
To leave the wooden womb, and puſhes into life.
Dryden.

To MISBEHA'VE. v. n. [mis and behave.] To act ill or improperly.

MISBEHA'VED. adj. [mis and behaved.] Untaught; ill-bred; uncivil.
Happineſs courts thee in her beſt array;
But, like a miſbehav'd and ſullen wench,
Thou pout'ſt upon thy fortune and thy love. Shakſ.

MISBEHA'VIOUR. n. ſ. [mis and behaviour.] Ill conduct; bad practice.
The miſbehaviour of particular perſons does not at all affect their cauſe, ſince a man may act laudably in ſome reſpects, who does not ſo in others.

My heart will ſigh when I miſcal it ſo. Shakſp.
The third act, which connects propoſitions and deduceth concluſions from them, the ſchools call diſcourſe; and we ſhall not miſcal it if we name it reaſon. Glanville's Sceptis.
What you miſcal their folly is their care. Dryd.

To MISCA'LCULATE. v. a. [mis and calculate.] To reckon wrong.
After all the care I have taken, there may be, in ſuch a multitude of paſſages, ſeveral miſquoted, miſinterpreted, and miſcalculated. Arbuthnot.

MISCA'RRIAGE. n. ſ. [mis and carriage.]

1. Unhappy event of an undertaking; failure; ill conduct.
Reſolutions of reforming do not always ſatisfy juſtice, nor prevent vengeance for former miſcarriages. King Charles.
When a counſellor, to ſave himſelf,
Would lay miſcarriages upon his prince,
Expoſing him to publick rage and hate,
O, 'tis an act as infamouſly baſe,
As, ſhould a common ſoldier ſculk behind,
And thruſt his general in the front of war. Dryden.
If the neglect or abuſe of the liberty he had, to examine what would really make for his happineſs, miſleads him, the miſcarriages that follow on it muſt be imputed to his own election. Locke.

2. A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former earth had to ſpare, and what they made ſo ill uſe, was now employed in digging and plowing; and the exceſs of fertility which contributed ſo much to their miſcarriages, was retrached and cut off. Woodward.

Your cures aloud you tell,
But wiſely your miſcarriages conceal. Garth.

How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the failings and miſcarriages of the righteous ſhall not be concealed, though his mercy of God be magnified in their pardon. Rogers.

2. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.

There muſt be miſcarriages and abortions; for there died many women with child. Graunt.

Our ſiſter's man is certainly miſcarried. Shakſp.

Is it concluded he ſhall be protector?
—It is determin'd, not concluded yet:
But ſo it muſt be if the king miſcarry. Shakſpeare.

If you miſcarry,
Your buſineſs of the world hath ſo an end,
And machination ceaſes. Shakſpeare.

Sweet Baſſanio, my ſhips have all miſcarried, my creditors grow cruel, my eſtate is very low. Shak.

I could mention ſome projects which I have brought to maturity, and others which have miſcarried. Addiſon.

No wonder that this expedient ſhould ſo often miſcarry, which requires ſo much art and genius to arrive at any perfection in it. Swift.

2. To have an abortion.

Give them a miſcarrying womb and dry breaſts. Hoſea

So many politick conceptions ſo elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for a delivery, do yet, in the iſſue, miſcarry and prove abortive. South.

His wife miſcarried; but the abortion proved a female fœtus. Pope and Arbuthnot.

You have proved yourſelf more tender of another's embrios, than the fondeſt mothers are of their own; for you have preſerved every thing that I miſcarried of. Pope.

To MISCA'ST. v. a. [mis and caſt.] To take a wrong account of.

Men miſcaſt their days; for in their age they deduce the account not from the day of their birth, but the year of our Lord wherein they were born. Brown.

MISCELLA'NE. n. ſ. [miſcellaneus, Lat. This is corrupted into maſtlin or meſtlin.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

It is thought to be of uſe to make ſome miſcellane in corn; as if you ſow a few beans with wheat, your wheat will be the better. Bacon.

MISCELLA'NEOUS. adj. [miſcellaneus, Lat.] Mingled; compoſed of various kinds.

Men lay the blame of thoſe evils whereof they know not the ground, upon public miſgovernment.
Raleigh.

2. Ill management.

Men are miſerable, if their education hath been ſo undiſciplined, as to leave them unfurniſhed of ſkill to ſpend their time; but moſt miſerable, if ſuch miſgovernment and unſkilfulneſs make them fall into vicious company. Taylor.

3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.

There is not chaſtity enough in language
Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am ſorry for thy much miſgovernment. Shakſp.

Misguiʹdance. n. ſ. [mis and guidance.] Falſe direction.

The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-firſt of March for the finding out of Eaſter: which has cauſed the miſguidance from the ſun which we lie under in reſpect of Eaſter, and the moveable feaſts. Holder on Time.

Whoſoever deceives a man, makes him ruin himſelf: and by cauſing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, he cauſes an error in his choice, the miſguidance of which muſt naturally engage him to his deſtruction. South.

To Misguiʹde. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.

Hunting after arguments to make good one ſide of a queſtion, and wholly to neglect thoſe which favour the other, is wilfully to miſguide the underſtanding; and is ſo far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debaſes it. Locke.

Miſguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war. Prior.

Of all the cauſes which conſpire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and miſguide the mind,
What the weak head with ſtrongeſt biaſs rules
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Mishaʹp. n. ſ. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.

To tell you what miſerable miſhaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his couſin, I ſhould too much fill your ears with ſtrange horrours. Sidney.

Since we are thus far entered into the conſideration of her miſhaps, tell me, have there been any more ſuch tempeſts wherein ſhe hath thus wretchedly been wrecked? Spenſer.

Sir knight, take to you wonted ſtrength,
And maſter theſe miſhaps with patient might. Spenſ.

Rome's readieſt champions, repoſe you here,
Secure from worldly chances and miſhaps. Shakſ.

It cannot be
But that ſucceſs attends him: if miſhap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; ſince no place like this
Can fit his puniſhment, or your revenge. Milton.

If the worſt of all miſhaps hath fallen,
Speak; for he could not die unlike himſelf. Denh.

Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had miſinformed. 2 Macc.

By no means truſt to your ſervants, who miſlead you, or miſinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourſelf. Bacon.

Bid her well beware,
Leſt by ſome fair appearing good ſurpriz'd,
She dictate falſe, and miſinform the will
To do what God expreſsly hath forbid. Milton.

Misinformaʹtion. n. ſ. [from miſinform.] Falſe intelligence; falſe accounts.

Let not ſuch be diſcouraged as deſerve well, by miſinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery. Bacon.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces againſt an inſulting baſeneſs, when backed with greatneſs, and ſet on by miſinformation. South.

To Misinteʹrpret. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong ſenſe, or wrong intention.

The gentle reader reſts happy to hear the worthieſt works miſinterpreted, the cleareſt actions obſcured, and the innocenteſt life traduced. Ben Jonſon.

After all the care I have taken, there may be ſeveral paſſages miſquoted and miſinterpreted.
Arbuthnot.

To Misjoʹin. v. a. [mis and join.] To join unfitly or improperly.

In reaſon's abſence mimick fancy wakes
To imitate her; but miſjoining ſhapes,
Wild work produces oft, and moſt in dreams;
Ill-matching words, and deeds long paſt, or late.
Milton.

Luther, more miſtaking what he read,
Miſjoins the ſacred body with the bread. Dryden.

To Misjuʹdge. v. n. [mis and judge.] To form falſe opinions; to judge ill.

You miſjudge;
You ſee through love, and that deludes your ſight;
As, what is ſtraight, ſeems crooked through the water. Dryden.

By allowing himſelf in what is innocent, he breeds offence to his weak and miſjudging neighbour. Atter.

Inſenſate!
Too long miſjudging have I thought thee wiſe;
But ſure relentleſs folly ſteels thy breaſt. Pope.

To Misjuʹdge. v. a. To miſtake; to judge ill of.

Where we miſjudge the matter, a miſcarriage draws pity after it; but when we are tranſported by pride, our ruin lies at our own door. L'Eſtr.

To Mislaʹy. v. a. [mis and lay.] To lay in a wrong place.

Mean time my worthy wife our arms miſlay'd,
And from beneath my head my ſword convey'd.
Dryden.

It is not ſo: thou haſt miſſpoke, miſheard;
Tell o'er thy tale again. Shakſpeare.

Mist. n. ſ. [mıſt, Saxon.]

1. A low thin cloud; a ſmall thin rain not perceived in ſingle drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning ſtar,
To us diſcovers day from far;
His light thoſe miſts and clouds diſſolv'd
Which our dark nation long involv'd. Denham.
And miſts condens'd to clouds obſcure the ſky,
And clouds diſſolv'd, the thirſty ground ſupply. Roſcommon.

As a miſt is a multitude of ſmall but ſolid globules, which therefore deſcend; ſo a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing elſe but a congeries of very ſmall and concave globules, which therefore aſcend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain ſuſpended, till by ſome motion in the air, being broken, they deſcend in ſolid drops; either ſmall, as in a miſt, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew.

But hov'ring miſts around his brows are ſpread,
And night with ſable ſhades involves his head. Dryden.

A cloud is nothing but a miſt flying high in the air, as a miſt is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.

My peoples eyes once blinded with ſuch miſts of ſuſpicion, they are miſled into the moſt deſperate actions. King Charles.

His paſſion caſt a miſt before his ſenſe,
And either made or magnify'd the offence. Dryd.

To Mist. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or ſteam.

Lend me a looking-glaſs;
If that her breath will miſt or ſtain the ſtone,
Why then ſhe lives. Shakſpeare

Mista'en. pret. and part. paſſ. of miſtake, for miſtaken, and ſo retained in Scotland.

This dagger hath miſta'en, for lo! the ſheath
Lies empty on the back of Montague,
The point miſſheathed in my daughter's boſom. Shakſpeare.

Mista'keable. adj. [from miſtake.] Liable to be conceived wrong.

It is not ſtrange to ſee the difference of a third part in ſo large an account, if we conſider how differently they are ſet forth in minor and leſs miſtakeable numbers. Brown.

To Mista'ke. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take ſomething for that which it is not.

Theſe did apprehend a great affinity between their invocation of ſaints and the heathen idolatry, or elſe there was no danger one ſhould be miſtaken for the other. Stillingfleet.

This will make the reader very much miſtake, and miſunderſtand his meaning. Locke.

Fancy paſſes for knowledge, and what is prettily ſaid is miſtaken for ſolid. Locke.

Fools into the notion fall,
That vice or virtue there is none at all:
Aſk your own heart, and nothing is ſo plain,
'Tis to miſtake them coſts the time and pain. Pope.

To Mista'ke. v. n. To err; not to judge right.

Seeing God found folly in his angels; mens judgments, which inhabit theſe houſes of clay, cannot be without their miſtakings. Raleigh.

Seldom any one miſtakes in his names of ſimple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green. Locke.

Servants miſtake, and ſometimes occaſion miſunderſtanding among friends. Swift

To be Mista'ken. To err. [To miſtake has a kind of reciprocal ſenſe; I miſtake, je me trompe. I am miſtaken, means, I miſconceive, I am in an errour; more frequently than I am ill underſtood; but, my opinion is miſtaken, means my opinion is not rightly underſtood.]

The towns, neither of the one ſide nor the other, willingly opening their gates to ſtrangers, nor ſtrangers willingly entering for fear of being miſtaken. Sidney.

England is ſo idly king'd:
You are too much miſtaken in this king:
Queſtion, your grace, the late embaſſadors,
How modeſt in exception, and withal
How terrible in conſtant reſolution. Shakſpeare.
Miſtaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that ſtroke. Waller.

Mista'ke. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Miſconception; errour.

He never ſhall find out fit mate; but ſuch
As ſome misfortune brings him, or miſtake. Milton.

Infallibility is an abſolute ſecurity of the underſtanding from all poſſibility of miſtake in what it believes. Tillotſon.

Thoſe terrors are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or ſuperſtitious miſtakes about it. Bentley.

Mista'kingly. adv. [from miſtaking.] Erroneouſly; falſly.

The error is not in the eye, but in the eſtimative faculty, which miſtakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.

To Mista'te. v. a. [mis and ſtate.] To ſtate wrong.

They miſtake the queſtion, when they talk of preſſing ceremonies. Biſhop Sanderſon.

To Misteach. v. a. [mis and teach.] To teach wrong.

Such guides ſhall be ſet over the ſeveral congregations as will be ſure to miſteach them. Sanderſon.

The extravagances of the lewdeſt life are the more conſummate diſorders of a miſtaught or neglected youth. L'Eſtrange.

To Miste'll. v. a. [mis and tell.] To tell unfaithfully or inaccurately.

To Miste'mper. v. a. [mis and temper.] To temper ill; to diſorder.

This inundation of miſtemper'd humour
Reſts by you only to be qualified. Shakſpeare.

Mi'ster. adj. [from meſtier, trade, Fr.] What miſter, what kind of. Obſolete.

The rederoſs knight toward him croſſed faſt,
To weet what miſter wight was ſo diſmay'd,
There him he finds all ſenſeleſs and aghaſt. Spenſ.

To Miste'rm. v. a. [mis and term.] To term erroneouſly.

Hence baniſhed, is baniſhed from the world;
And world exil'd is death. That baniſhed
Is death miſterm'd. Shakſpeare.

To Misthi'nk. v. a. [mis and think.] To think ill; to think wrong.

How will the country, for theſe woful chances,
Miſthink the king, and not be ſatisfy'd. Shakſp.
We, the greateſt, are miſthought
For things that others do. Shakſpeare.
Thoughts! which how found they harbour in thy breaſt,
Adam, miſthought of her to thee ſo dear? Milton.

To Misti'me. v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.

Mi'stiness. n. ſ. [from miſty.] Cloudineſs; ſtate of being overcaſt.

The ſpeedy depredation of air upon watry moiſture, and verſion of the ſame into air, appeareth in the ſudden vaniſhing of vapours from glaſs, or the blade of a ſword, ſuch as doth not at all detain or imbibe the moiſture, for the miſtineſs ſcattereth immediately. Bacon.

Mi'stion. n. ſ. [from miſtus, Lat.] The ſtate of being mingled.

In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of miſtion, and though they wholly ſeem to retain unto the body, depart upon diſunion. Brown.

Both bodies do, by the new texture reſulting from their miſtion, produce colour. Boyle.

Mistleto'e. n. ſ. [myꞅteltan, Saxon; miſtel, Daniſh, birdlime; and tan, a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the miſtletoe conſiſts of one leaf, which is ſhaped like a baſon, divided into four parts, and beſet with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and conſiſts of four ſhorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous ſubſtance, incloſing a plain heart-ſhaped ſeed: this plant is always produced from ſeed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, but will always grow upon trees, from whence the ancients accounted it a ſuperplant, who thought it to be an excreſcence on the tree without ſeed. The manner of its propagation is as follows: the miſtletoe thruſh, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the ſeed from tree to tree, for the viſcous part of the berry, which immediately ſurrounds the ſeed, doth ſometimes faſten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get diſengaged of, he ſtrikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and ſo leaves the ſeed ſticking by this viſcous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a ſmooth part of the tree, will faſten itſelf, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth moſt readily take upon are the apple, the aſh, and ſome other ſmooth rind trees: whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of theſe plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preſerved by the curious in their collections of natural curioſities. Miller.

If ſnowe do continue, ſheepe hardly that fare
Crave miſtle and ivie for them for to ſpare. Tuſſer.
A barren and deteſted vale, you ſee it is:
The trees, though ſummer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moſs, and baleful miſſelto. Shakſp.

Miſſeltoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, ſometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks: the miſſeltoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green winter and ſummer, and beareth a white gliſtering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.

All your temples ſtrow
With laurel green, and ſacred miſſletoe. Gay.

MI'STLIKE. adj. [miſt and like.] Reſembling a miſt.

Good Romeo, hide thyſelf.
—Not I, unleſs the breath of heart-ſick groans
Miſtlike enclofe me from the ſearch of eyes. Shakſ.

MISTO'LD. The part. paſſ. of miſtell.

MISTO'OK. The part. paſſ. of miſtake.

Mocking-stock. n. f. [mocking and stock.] A butt for merriment.

Mo'dal. adj. [modale, Fr. modalis, Lat.] Relating to the form or mode, not the essence.

When we speak of faculties of the soul, we assert not with the schools their real distinction from it, but only a modal diversity. Glanville.

Moda'lity. n. f. [from modal.] Accidental difference; modal accident.

The motions of the mouth by which the voice is differenced, are the natural elements of speech; and the application of them in their several compositions, or words made of them, to signify things, or the modalities of things, and so to serve for communication of notions, is artificial Holder.

Mode. n. f. [mode, Fr. modus, Lat.]

1. External variety; accidental discrimination; accident.

A mode is that which cannot subsist in and of itself, but is always esteemed as belonging to, and substituting by, the help of some substance, which, for that reason, is called its subject. Watts.

Few allow mode to be called a being in the same perfect sense as a substance is, and some modes have evidently more of real entity than others. Watts.

2. Gradation; degree.

What modes of light betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam;
Of mid, the headlong tenets between,
And bound fair actions on the tainted green. Pope.

3. Manner; method; form; fashion.

Our Saviour beheld
A table richly spread, in regal mode,
With dishes pil'd. Milton.

The duty itself being resolved upon, the mode of doing it may easily be found. Taylor.

What modicums of wit he utters: his evasions have ears thus long. Shakspeare.

Though hard their fate,
A cruse of water, and an ear of corn,
Yet still they grudg'd that modicum. Dryden.

MODIFI'ABLE. adj. [from modify.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.

It appears to be more difficult to conceive a distinct, visible image in the matter, invariable essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either still escapes my comprehension. Locke.

MODI'FICABLE. adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.

MODIFICA'TION. n. s. [modification, Fr.] The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of external qualities or mode.

The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, the letters of the alphabet, formed by the motions of the mouth Holder.

The phænomena of colours in refracted or reflected light, are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impressed, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton.

If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cogitative substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Bentley.

To MO'DIFY. v. a. [modifier, French.]

1. To change the external qualities or accidents of any thing; to shape.

Yet there is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the voluble motions of the organs, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.

The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fell upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton.

2. To soften; to moderate.

Of his grace
He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.

To MO'DIFY. v. n. To extenuate.

After all this discanting and modifying upon the matter, there is hazard on the yielding side. L'Estrange.

MODI'LLON. n. s. [Fr. modiolus, Lat.]

Modillons, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the corinthian and composite orders, and serve to support the projecture of the larmier or drip: this part must be distinguished from the great model, which is the diameter of the pillar, for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillons, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabrick. Harris.

The modillons or dentelli make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spectator.

MO'DISH. adj. [from mode.] Fashionable; formed according to the reigning custom,

But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd.
Dryden.

Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city; the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more virtuous than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Spectator.

This zealot
Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clerick before, and lay behind. Hudibras.

Ye mongrel work of heav'n, with human ſhapes,
That have but juſt enough of ſenſe to know
The maſter's voice. Dryden.

I'm but a half-ſtram'd villain yet,
But mongrel mitchievous. Dryden.

Baſe, groveling, worthleſs wretches,
Mongrel in faction; poor faint-hearted traitors. Addiſon

His friendſhips full to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind;
No fools of rank, or mongrel breed,
Who fain would paſs for lords indeed. Swift.

MO'NIMENT. n. ſ. [from monco, Lat.] It ſeems here to ſignify inſcription.

Some others were driven and diſſent
Into great ingots and to wedges ſquare,
Some in round plates without a monument. Spenſ.

To MO'NISH. v. a. [monco, Lat.] To admoniſh, of which it is a contraction.

Moniſh him gently, which ſhall make him both willing to mend, and glad to go forward in love. Aſcham.

MONI'TION. n. ſ. [monitio, Lat. monition, French.]

1. Information; hint.

We have no viſible monition of the returns of any other periods, ſuch as we have of the day, by ſucceſſive light and darkneſs. Holder on Time.

2. Inſtruction; document.

Unruly ambition is deaf, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counſels and monitions of reaſon itſelf L'Eſtrange.

Then after ſage monitions from his friends,
His talents to employ for nobler ends,
He turns to politicks his dang'rous wit. Swift.

MO'NITOR. n. ſ. [Lat.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives uſeful hints. It is uſed of an upper ſcholar in a ſchool commiſſioned by the maſter to look to the boys in his abſence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent: be but his ſcholar, and you are ſafe. Bacon.

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have theſe notions alſo firm and untainted, to carry his monitor in his boſom, his law in his heart, and to have ſuch a converſe as might be its own cabinet South.

We can but divine who it is that ſpeaks; whether Perſius himſelf, or his friend and monitor, or a third perſon. Dryden.

The pains that come from the neceſſities of nature, are monitors to us to beware of greater miſchiefs. Locke.

MO'NITORY. adj. [monitoire, Fr. monitorius, Lat.] Conveying uſeful inſtruction; giving admonition.

Loſſes, miſcarriages, and diſappointments, are monitory and inſtructive. L'Eſtrange.

He is ſo taken up itill, in ſpite of the monitory hint in my eſſay with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pope.

MO'NITORY. n. ſ. Admonition; warning.

A king of Hungary took a biſhop in battle, and kept him priſoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon.

MONK. n. ſ. [monec, Sax. monachus, Lat. μοναχὸς.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain obſervances.

I would prove the verity of certain words,
Spoke by a holy monk. Shakſpeare.

Abdemelech, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himſelf to a ſolitary life, and became a melancholy Mahometan monk. Knolles

The drouſh monks, the ſcorn and ſhame of manhood,
Route and prepare once more to take poſſeſſion,
And nettle in their ancient hives again. Rowe

Monks, in ſome reſpects agree with regulars, as in the ſubſtantial vows of religion; but in other reſpects, monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to ſo ſtrict a rule of life as monks are. Ayliffe.

MO'NKERY. n. ſ. [from monk.] The monaſtick life.

Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous ſervitude of their rash and impotent votaries, nor the inconveniences of their monkery. Hall.

My name of Ptolemy!
It is ſo long it aſks an hour to write-it:

I'll change it into Jove or Mars!
Or any civil monosyllable,
That will not tire my hand. Dryden.

Poets, although not insensible how much our language was already over-stocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses. Swift.

Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy. Pope.

MONOSY'LLABLED. adj. [monosyllabe, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.

Nine taylors, if rightly spell'd,
Into one man are monosyllabled. Cleaveland.

MONO'TONY. n. f. [μονοτονία; μόνος and τόνος; monotonie, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.

I could object to the repetition of the same rhimes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony. Pope

MONSIEUR. n. f. [Fr.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.

A Frenchman his companion;
An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
A Gallian gal. Shakspeare.

MONSO'ON. n. f. [monsón, monçon, Fr.]

Monsoons are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for half a year one way, others but for three months, and then shift and blow for six or three months directly contrary. Harris.

The monsoons and trade winds are constant and periodical even to the thirtieth degree of latitude all around the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds. Ray.

MO'NSTER. n. f. [monstre, Fr. monstrum, Latin.]

1. Something out of the common order of nature.

Methinks heroic poesie till now,
Like some fantastic fairy land did shew,
Gods, devils, nymphs, witches, and giants race,
And all but man in man's chief work had place.
Thou like some worthy knight with sacred arms.
Dost drive the monsters thence, and end the charms.
Cowley.

It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they are derived. Locke.

2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.

If she live long,
And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters. Shakspeare.

All human virtue to its latest breath,
Finds Envy never conquer'd but by death:
The great Alcides, ev'ry labour past,
Had still this monster to subdue at last. Pope.

To MO'NSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things. Not in use.

Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree
That monsters it. Shakspeare

I had rather one scratch my head i' th' sun,
When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakspeare.

MONSTRO'SITY. } n. f. [from monstrous.]
MONSTRUO'SITY. } The state of being monstrous, or out of the common order of the universe. Monstrosity is more analogous.

This is the monstruosity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd. Shakspeare.

Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrosity. Bacon.

We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrosity in educations: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast. South.

By the same law monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness the case of hermaphrodites. Arbuthnot and Pope.

MO'NSTROUS. adj. [monstreux, Fr. monstrosus, Latin.]

1. Deviating from the stated order of nature.

Nature there perverse,
Brought forth all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Hydras, and gorgons, and chimeras dire. Milton.

Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals. Locke.

2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.

Is it not monstrous that this player here
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his conceit,
That, from her working, all his visage wan'd? Shakspeare.

O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack. Shakspeare.

3. Irregular; enormous.

No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,
The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.

4. Shocking; hateful.

This was an invention given out by the Spaniards, to have the monstrous from their nation received. Bacon.

MO'NSTROUS. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.

Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a dram of each, turn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top. Bacon.

She was easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

Add, that the rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor Dryden.

MO'NSTROUSLY. adv. [from monstrous.]

1. In a manner out of the common order of nature; shockingly; terribly; horribly.

Tiberius was bad enough in his youth, but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age. South.

2. To a great or enormous degree.

He walks;
And that self-chain about his neck,
Which he forewore most monstrously to have. Shak.

These truths with his example you disprove,
Who with his wife is monstrously in love. Dryden.

MO'NSTROUSNESS. n. f. [from monstrous.] Enormity; irregular nature or behaviour.

See the monstrousness of man,
When he looks out in an ungrateful shape! Shakf.

MO'NTANT. n. f. [Fr.] A term in fencing.

Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?—To see thee fight, to see thee pass thy punto, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant. Shakspeare.

MONTERO. n. f. [Spanish.] A horseman's cap.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

MONTE'TH. n. f. [from the name of the inventor.] A vessel in which glasses are washed.

New things produce new words, and thus Monteth
Has by one vessel fix'd his name from death. King.

MONTH. n. f. [monaδ, Sax.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiack: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the expiration of your month.
Sojourn with my sister. Shakspeare.

From a month old even unto five years old. Lev.

Months are not only lunary, and measured by the moon, but also solary, and terminated by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptick. Brown.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemned by fate
To daily death, Dryden.

MONTH's mind. n. f. Longing desire.

You have a month's mind to them. Shakspeare.

For at a trumpet sound, or drum beat,
Who has not a month's mind to combat? Hudibras.

MO'NTHLY. adj. [from mouth.]

1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.

I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite. Bentley.

2. Happening every month.

The youth of heav'nly birth I view'd,
For whom our monthly victims are renew'd. Dryd.

MO'NTHLY. adv. Once in a month.

If the one may very well monthly, the other may as well even daily, be iterated. Hooker.

O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That changes monthly in her circled orb;
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakf.

MONTOIR. n. f. [Fr.] In horsemanship, a stone as high as the stirrups, which Italian riding-masters mount their horses from, without putting their foot in the stirrup. Dict.

MONTRO'SS. n. f. An under-gunner, or assistant to a gunner, engineer, or fire-master. Dict.

MO'NUMENT. n. f. [monument, Fr. monumentum, Latin.]

1. Any thing by which the memory of persons or things is preserved; a memorial.

In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Jasius. Raleigh.

He is become a notable monument of unpitied rous disloyalty. King Charles.

So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Or monument to ages: and thereon
Offer sweet-smelling gums. Milton.

Of ancient British art
A pleasing monument, no less admir'd
Than what from Attick or Etrusan hands
Arose. Philips.

Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings. Pope.

2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.

On your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial. Shakspeare

The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
Shall on his monument their odours throw. Sandys.

In a heap of slain,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress
Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument.
Dryden.

With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,
Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn. Pope.

MONUME'NTAL. adj. [from monument.]

1. Memorial; preserving memory.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak. Milton.

The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind. Woodward.

The polish'd pillar different sculptures grace,
A work curiously monumental bears. Pope.

2. Raised in honour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.

Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done is to hang quite out of fashion
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakspeare.
I'll not tear that whiter skin of her than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakspeare.
Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Softly may he be past it
Of his monumental rest Crashaw.

MOOD. n. s. [mode, Fr. modus, Lat.]

1. The form of an argument.

Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. the universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts.

Aristotle reduced our loose reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mood and figure. Baker.

2. Style of musick.

They move
In perfect phalanx, to the Dorian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton.
Their sound seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint. Milton.

3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood. Clarke.

4. [from mod, Gothick; mob, Sax. moed, Dutch; and generally in all Teutonick dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.

The trembling ghosts, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and staring wide
With stony eyes. Fairy Queen.
The kingly beast upon her gazing flood,
With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood. Fairy Queen.

Eyes unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare.
Clorinda changed to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her veinid cheeks depaint. Fairy.
Solyman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Knolles.
She was in fittest mood
For cutting corns, or letting blood. Hudibras.
These two kids t' appease his angry mood
I bear, of which the fairies give him good. Dryd.
He now prolate of tears,
In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addis.

5. Anger; rage; heat of mind. Mod, in Gothick, signifies habitual temper.

That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they cast forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker.

MO'ODY. adj. [from mood.]

1. Angry; out of humour.

How now, moody? Shakspeare.
What is't thou can'st demand?
Chide him reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclined to mirth;
But being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakspeare
Every peevish moody malecontent
Shall fit the fool's part in an uproar. Rowe.

2. Mental; intellectual: mob in Saxon signifies the mind.

Give me some musick; musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakspeare

MOON. n. s. [μην; mena, Gothick; mena, Saxon; mona, Islandick; maane, Danish; mane, German; maen, Dutch.]

1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phœbe.

The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakspeare.
Diana hath her name from morning, which is the property of the moon, being by run cold and moist, and is feigned to be a goddess huntress. Peacham.
Beneath the mighty ocean's wealthy caves,
Beneath the eternal pavement of the waves,
Where their vast court the mother waters keep,
And undisturb'd by moons in silence sleep. Cowley.
Ye moons and stars bear witness to the truth! Dryden.

2. A month. Ainsworth.

3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as, a half moon.

MOON-BEAM. n. s. [moon and beam.] Rays of lunar light.

The division and quavering, which please some in musick, have an agreement with the glimmering of light, as the moon-beams playing upon a wave. Bacon.
On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver. Dryden.

MOON-CALF. n. s. [moon and calf.]

1. A monster; a false conception: supposed perhaps anciently to be produced by the influence of the moon.

How can'st thou to be the liege of this moon-calf? Shakspeare.

2. A dolt; a stupid fellow.

The potion works not on the part design'd,
But turns his brain, and stupifies his mind;
The dotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden.

MOON-EYED. adj. [moon and eye.]

1. Having eyes affected by the revolutions of the moon.

2. Dim-eyed; purblind. Ainsworth.

MOON-FERN. n. s. [hemionitis, Latin.] A plant. Ainsworth.

MO'ONLESS. adj. [from moon.] Not enlightened by the moon.

Affrighted by a tempest, one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden.

MO'ONLIGHT. n. s. [moon and light.] The light afforded by the moon.

Their bishop and his clergy, being departed from them by moon-light, to choose in his room any other bishop, had been altogether impossible. Hooker.
Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love Shakf.

MO'ONLIGHT. adj. Illuminated by the moon.

If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us. Shakf.
What beck'ning ghost along the moonlight shade
Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade? Pope.

MO'ONSED. n. s. [menyspermum, Lat.]

The moonseed hath a rosaceous flower: the pointal is divided into three parts at the top, and afterward becomes the fruit or berry, in which is included one flat seed, which is, when ripe, hollowed like the appearance of the moon. Miller.

MO'ONSHINE. n. s. [moon and shine.]

1. The lustre of the moon.

Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out. Shakspeare.
I, by the moonshine, to the windows went:
And, ere I was aware, sigh'd to myself. Dryden.

2. [In burlesque.] A month.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
Lag of a brother. Shakspeare.

MO'ONSHINE. } adj. [moon and shine.] Illu-
MO'ONSHINY. } minated by the moon: both seem a popular corruption of moon-shining.

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,

The Lord did that thing on the morrow. Exodus.
Peace, good reader, do not weep,
Peace, the lovers are aſleep;
Let them ſleep, let them ſleep on,
Till this ſtormy night is gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with the light,
Whoſe day ſhall never ſleep in night. Craſhaw.
To morrow you will live, you always cry,
In what far country doth this morrow lie?
That 'tis ſo mighty long e'er it arrive:
Beyond the Indies does this morrow live?
'Tis ſo far fetch'd this morrow, that I fear
'Twill be both very old, and very dear.
To morrow will I live, the fool does ſay,
To day itſelf's too late, the wiſe liv'd yeſterday. Cowley.

2. To Mo'rrow. [This is an idiom of the ſame kind, ſuppoſing morrow to mean originally morning: as, to night; to day.] On the day after this current day.

To morrow comes; 'tis noon; 'tis night:
This day like all the former flies;
Yet on he runs to ſeek delight
To morrow, till to night he dies. Prior.

3. To morrow is ſometimes, I think improperly, uſed as a noun.

Our yeſterday's to morrow now is gone,
And ſtill a new to morrow does come on.
We by to morrows draw out all our ſtore,
Till the exhauſted well can yield no more. Cowley.
To morrow is the time when all is to be rectified. Spectator.

MO'RTAR. n. ſ. [morter, Dutch; mortier, Fr.] Cement made of lime and ſand with water, and uſed to join ſtones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and ſand mix'd up with water, ſerving as a cement, and uſed by maſons and bricklayers in building of walls of ſtone and brick. Wolfius obſerves, that the ſand ſhould be dry and ſharp, ſo as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, ſo as to foul the water it is waſhed in. He alſo finds fault with maſons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime ſlacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and alſo in letting their mortar cool and die before they uſe it, therefore he adviſes, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be uſed.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakſpeare.

They had brick for ſtone, and ſlime for mortar. Geneſis.

Lime hot out of the kiln mixed ſoft with water, putting ſand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.

MU'MMY. n. ſ. [mumie, Fr. mumia, Lat. derived by Salmaſius from amomum, by Bochart from the Arabick.]

1. A dead body preſerved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two ſubſtances for medicinal uſe under the name of mummy: one is the dried fleſh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and ſpice; the other is the liquor running from ſuch mummy when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is ſometimes of a liquid, ſometimes of a ſolid form, as it is preſerved in veſſels, or ſuffered to dry: the firſt kind is brought in large pieces, of a friable texture, light and ſpungy, of a blackiſh brown colour, and often black and clammy on the ſurface; it is of a ſtrong but not agreeable ſmell: the ſecond, in its liquid ſtate, is a thick, opake, reddiſh oily fluid, of a blackiſh and a ſtrong, but not diſagreeable ſmell: in its indurated ſtate it is a dry, ſolid ſubſtance, of a fine ſhining black colour and cloſe texture, eaſily broken, and of a good ſmell: this ſort is extremely dear, and the firſt ſort ſo cheap, that we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggiſts are ſupplied with is the fleſh of any bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen ſo plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and ſome other cheap ingredients, ſend them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhaled and the embalming matter has penetrated. Hill's Mat. Med.

The ſilk
Was dy'd in mummy, which the ſkilful
Conſerv'd of maidens hearts. Shakſpeare.

MY'RTLE. n. ſ. [myrtus, Lat. myrte, Fr.] A fragrant tree ſacred to Venus.

The flower of the myrtle conſiſts of ſeveral leaves diſpoſed in a circular order, which expand in form of a roſe; upon the top of the foot-ſtalk is the ovary, which has a ſhort ſtar-like cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-ſhaped ſeeds. Miller.

There will I make thee beds of roſes,
With a thouſand fragrant poſies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle
Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakſpeare.

I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand ſea. Shakſpeare.

Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for ſuch is the nature of theſe trees, that if they be planted, though a good ſpace one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peacham.

Nor can the muſe the gallant Sidney paſs
The plume of war! with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Thomſon.

MYSE'LF. n. ſ. [my and ſelf.]

1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myſelf do it, that is, not I by proxy; not another.

As his hoſt,
Who ſhould againſt his murth'rer ſhut the door,
Not bear the knife myſelf. Shakſpeare.

2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique caſe.

They have miſſed another pain, againſt which I ſhould have been at a loſs to defend myſelf. Swift.

3. I is ſometimes omitted, to give force to the ſentence.

Myſelf ſhall mount the roſtrum in his favour,
And try to gain his pardon. Addiſon.

MY'STERY. n. ſ. [μυστήριον; myſtere, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; ſomething awfully obſcure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of thoſe myſteries, which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakſpeare.

Upon holy days let the matter of your meditations be according to the myſtery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add to the prayer which is fitted to the myſtery. Taylor.

If God ſhould pleaſe to reveal unto us the great myſtery of the Trinity, or ſome other myſteries in our holy religion, we ſhould not be able to underſtand them, unleſs he would beſtow on us ſome new faculties of the mind. Swift.

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.
To thy great comfort in this myſtery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter. Shakſpeare.
Important truths ſtill let your fables hold,
And moral myſteries with art unfold. Granville.
3. A trade; a calling: in this ſenſe it ſhould, according to Warburton, be written miſtery, from meſtier, French, a trade.
And that which is the nobleſt myſteric,
Brings to reproach and common infamy. Spenſer.
Inſtruction, manners, myſteries and trades,
Degrees, obſervances, cuſtoms, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakſp.

MY'STICAL. } MY'STICK. } adj. [myſticus, Lat.]
1. Sacredly obſcure.
Let God himſelf that made me, let not man that knows not himſelf, be my inſtructor, concerning the myſtical way to heaven. Hooker.
From ſalvation all fleſh being excluded this way, God hath revealed a way myſtical and ſupernatural. Hooker.
2. Involving ſome ſecret meaning; emblematical.
Ye five other wand'ring fires! that move
In myſtick dance, not without ſong, reſound
His praiſe, who out of darkneſs call'd up light. Milton.
It is Chriſt's body in the ſacrament and out of it; but in the ſacrament not the natural truth, but the ſpiritual and myſtical. Taylor.
It is plain from the Apocalypſe, that myſtical Babylon is to be conſumed by fire. Burnet.
3. Obſcure; ſecret.
Left new fears diſturb the happy ſtate,
Know, I have ſearch'd the myſtick rolls of fate. Dryden.

MY'STICALLY. adv. [from myſtical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying ſome ſecret meaning.

Nath'leſs, my brother, ſince we paſſed are
Unto this point, we will appeaſe our jar. Spenſer.

The torrid clime
Smote on him ſore beſides, vaulted with fire,
Nath'leſs he ſo endur'd, 'till on the beach
Of that inflamed ſea he ſtood, and call'd
His legions. Milton.

NA'THMORE. adv. [na the more.] Never the more. Obſolete.

Yet nathmore by his bold hearty ſpeech,
Could his blood-froſen heart emboldn'd be. Spenſ.

NATION. n. ſ. [nation, Fr. natio, Lat.]

1. A people diſtinguiſhed from another people; generally by their language, original, or government.

If Edward III. had proſpered in his French wars, and peopled with Engliſh the towns which he won, as he began at Calais driving out the French, his ſucceſſors holding the ſame courſe, would have filled all France with our nation. Raleigh.

A nation properly ſignifies a great number of families derived from the ſame blood, born in the ſame country, and living under the ſame government. Temple.

2. A great number: emphatically.

When after battle I the field have ſeen
Spread o'er with ghaſtly ſhapes, which once were men;
A nation cruſht! a nation of the brave!
A realm of death! and on this ſide the grave!
Are there, ſaid I, who from this ſad ſurvey,
This human chaos, carry ſmiles away! Young.

NA'TIONAL. adj. [national, French; from nation.]

1. Publick; general; not private; not particular.

They in their earthly Canaan plac'd,
Long time ſhall dwell and proſper: but when ſins
National interrupt their public peace. Milton.

The members retired to their homes, reaſſume the native ſedateneſs of their temper. Swift.

3. Conferred by birth; belonging by birth.

But ours is a privilege ancient and native,
Hangs not on an ordinance, or power legiſlative;
And firſt, 'tis to ſpeak whatever we pleaſe. Denham.

4. Relating to the birth; pertaining to the time or place of birth.

If theſe men have defeated the law, and outrun native puniſhment; though they can outſtrip men, they have no wings to fly from God. Shakſpeare.

Many of our bodies ſhall, no doubt,
Find native graves. Shakſpeare.

5. Original; that which gave being.

Have I now ſeen death? is this the way
I muſt return to native duſt? O ſight
Of terror, foul, and ugly to behold. Milton.

NA'TIVE. n. ſ.

1. One born in any place; original inhabitant.

Make no extirpation of the natives, under pretence of planting religion; God ſurely will no way be pleaſed with ſuch ſacrifices. Bacon.

Tully, the humble muſhroom ſcarcely known,
The lowly native of a country town. Dryden.

There ſtood a monument to Tacitus the hiſtorian, to the emperors Tacitus and Florianus, natives of the place. Addiſon.

Our natives have a fuller habit, ſquarer, and more extended cheſts, than the people that be beyond us to the ſouth. Blackmore.

They looked upon thoſe as the true days of their nativity, wherein they were freed from the pains and ſorrows of a troubleſome world. Nelſon.

2. Time, place, or manner of birth.

My huſband, and my children both,
And you the calenders of their nativity,
Go to a goſſip's feaſt. Shakſpeare.

They ſay there is diviuity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance or death. Shakſpeare.

When I vow, I weep; and vows ſo born,
In their nativity all truth appears. Shakſpeare.

Thy birth and thy nativity is of Canaan. Ezekiel

3. State or place of being produced.

Theſe, in their dark nativity, the deep
Shall yield us pregnant with infernal flame. Milton.

NA'TURAL. adj. [naturalis, Lat. naturel, French.]

1. Produced or effected by nature; not artificial.

There is no natural motion of any particular heavy body, which is perpetual, yet it is poſſible from them to contrive ſuch an artificial revolution as ſhall conſtantly be the cauſe of itſelf. Wilkins.

2. Illegitimate; not legal.

This would turn the vein of that we call natural, to that of legal propagation; which has ever been encouraged as the other has been diſtavoured by all inſtitutions. Temple.

3. Beſtowed by nature; not acquired.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it ſhould ſeem that the advantage lies on the ſide of children born from noble and wealthy parents. Swift.

4. Not forced; not far-fetched; dictated by nature.

I will now deliver a few of the propereſt and naturalleſt conſiderations that belong to this piece. Wotton.

10. Oppoſed to violent: as, a natural death.

NA'TURAL. n. ſ. [from nature.]

1. An idiot; one whom nature debars from underſtanding; a fool.

That a monſter ſhould be ſuch a natural. Shakſp.

Take the thoughts of one out of that narrow compaſs he has been all his life confined to, you will find him no more capable of reaſoning than a perfect natural. Locke.

2. Native; original inhabitant. Not in uſe.

The inhabitants and naturals of the place, ſhould be in a ſtate of freemen. Abbot.

Oppreſſion, in many places, wears the robes of juſtice, which domineering over the naturals may not ſpare ſtrangers, and ſtrangers will not endure it. Raleigh.

3. Gift of nature; nature; quality. Not in uſe.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; ſuch as preſuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they underſtand not things. Ben Jonſon.

To conſider them in their pure naturals, the earl's intellectual faculties were his ſtronger part, and the duke's, his practical. Wotton.

NA'TURALIST. n. ſ. [from natural.] A ſtudent in phyſicks, or natural philoſophy.

Admirable artifice! wherewith Galen, though a mere naturaliſt, was ſo taken, that he could not but adjudge the honour of a hymn to the wiſe Creator. More.

It is not credible, that the naturaliſt could be deceived in his account of a place that lay in the neighbourhood of Rome. Addiſon.

NATURALIZA'TION. n. ſ. [from naturalize.] The act of inveſting aliens with the privileges of native ſubjects.

The Spartans were nice in point of naturalization; whereby, while they kept their compaſs, they ſtood firm; but when they did ſpread, they became a windfall. Bacon.

Encouragement may be given to any merchants that ſhall come over and turn a certain ſtock of their own, as naturalization, and freedom from cuſtoms the two firſt years. Temple.

Enemies, by taking advantage of the general naturalization act, invited over foreigners of all religions. Swift.

To NA'TURALIZE. v. a. [from natural.]

1. To adopt into a community; to inveſt with the privileges of native ſubjects.

The lords informed the king, that the Iriſh might not be naturalized without damage to themſelves or the crown. Davies.

2. To make natural; to make eaſy like things natural.

He riſes freſh to his hammer and anvil; cuſtom has naturalized his labour to him. South.

NA'TURALLY. adv. [from natural.]

1. According to the power or impulſes of unaſſiſted nature.

Our ſovereign good is deſired naturally; God, the author of that natural deſire, hath appointed natural means whereby to fulfil it; but man having utterly diſabled his nature unto theſe means, hath had other revealed, and hath received from heaven a law to teach him, how that which is deſired naturally, muſt now ſupernaturally be attained. Hooker.

If ſenſe be not certain in the reports it makes of things to the mind, there can be naturally no ſuch thing as certainty of knowledge. South.

When you have once habituated your heart to a ſerious performance of holy interceſſion, you have done a great deal to render it incapable of ſpite and envy, and to make it naturally delight in the happineſs of mankind. Law.

2. According to nature; without affectation; with juſt repreſentation.

Theſe things, to in my ſong, I naturally may ſhow,
Now as the mountain high, then as the valley low;
Here fruitful as the mead, there, as the heath be bare.
Then, as the gloomy wood, I may be rough, tho' rare. Drayton.

That part
Was aptly fitted, and naturally performed. Shakſ.

This anſwers aptly and naturally to the place of the abyſs before the deluge, incloſ'd within the earth. Burnet.

The thoughts are to be meaſured only by their propriety; that is, as they flow more or leſs naturally from the perſons and occaſions. Dryden.

3. Spontaneouſly; without art; without cultivation: as, there is no place where wheat naturally grows.

NA'TURALNESS. n. ſ. [from natural.]

1. The ſtate of being given or produced by nature.

The naturalneſs of a deſire, is the cauſe that the ſatisfaction of it is pleaſure, and pleaſure importunes the will; and that which importunes the will, puts a difficulty on the will refuſing or forbearing it. South.

2. Conformity to truth and reality; not affectation.

He muſt underſtand what is contained in the temperament of the eyes, in the naturalneſs of the eyebrows. Dryden.

Horace ſpeaks of theſe parts in an ode that may be reckoned among the fineſt for the naturalneſs of the thought, and the beauty of the expreſſion. Addiſon.

NATURE. n. ſ. [natura, Lat. nature, Fr.]

1. An imaginary being ſuppoſed to preſide over the material and animal world.

Thou, nature, art my goddeſs; to thy law
My ſervices are bound. Shakſpeare.

When it was ſaid to Anaxagoras, the Athenians have condemned you to die, he ſaid, and nature them. Bacon.

Let the poſtillion nature mount, and let
The coachman art be ſet. Cowley.

Heav'n beſtows
At home all riches that wiſe nature needs. Cowley.

Simple nature to his hope has giv'n,
Beyond the cloud-topt hill an humbler heav'n. Pope.

2. The native ſtate or properties of any thing, by which it is diſcriminated from others.

Why leap'd the hills, why did the mountains ſhake,
What ail'd them their fix'd natures to forſake? Cowley.

Between the animal and rational province, ſome animals have a dark reſemblance of the influxes of reaſon: ſo between the corporeal and intellectual world, there is man participating much of both natures. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The nature of brutes, beſides what is common to them with plants, doth conſiſt in having ſuch faculties, whereby they are capable of apprehending external objects, and of receiving pain or pleaſure from them. Wilkins.

3. The conſtitution of an animated body.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rd earth,
Is faſhion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakſ.

We're not ourſelves,
When nature, being oppreſt, commands the mind
To ſuffer with the body. Shakſpeare.

4. Diſpoſition of mind; temper.

Nothing could have ſubdu'd nature
To ſuch a lowneſs but his unkind daughters. Shakſ.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whoſe nature is ſo far from doing harms,
That he ſuſpects none, on whoſe fooliſh honeſty
My practices ride eaſy. Shakſpeare.

5. The regular courſe of things.

My end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence. Shakſ.

6. The compaſs of natural exiſtence.

If their dam may be judge, the young apes are the moſt beautiful things in nature. Glanville.

7. The conſtitution and appearances of things.

The works, whether of poets, painters, moraliſts, or hiſtorians, which are built upon general nature, live for ever; while thoſe which depend for their exiſtence on particular cuſtoms and habits, a partial view of nature, or the fluctuation of faſhion, can only be coeval with that which firſt raiſed them from obſcurity. Reynolds.

8. Natural affection, or reverence; native ſenſations.

Have we not ſeen
The murd'ring ſon aſcend his parent's bed,
Thro' violated nature force his way,
And ſtain the ſacred womb where once he lay? Pope.

9. The ſtate or operation of the material world.

He binding nature faſt in fate,
Left conſcience free and will. Pope.

10. Sort; ſpecies.

A diſpute of this nature cauſed miſchief in abundance betwixt a king and an archbiſhop. Dryden.

11. Sentiments or images adapted to nature, or conformable to truth and reality.

Only nature can pleaſe thoſe taſtes which are unprejudiced and refined. Addiſon.

Nature and Homer were, he found, the ſame. Pope.

12. Phyſicks; the ſcience which teaches the qualities of things.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night,
God ſaid, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

13. Of this word which occurs ſo frequently, with ſignifications ſo various, and ſo difficultly defined, Boyle has given an explication, which deſerves to be epitomiſed.

Nature ſometimes means the Author of Nature, or natura naturans, as, nature hath made man partly corporeal and partly immaterial. For nature in this ſenſe may be uſed the word creator.

Nature ſometimes means that on whoſe account a thing is what it is, and is called, as when we define the nature of an angle. For nature in this ſenſe may be uſed eſſence or quality.

Nature ſometimes means what belongs to a living creature, at its nativity, or accrues to it by its birth, as when we ſay, a man is noble by nature, or a child is naturally froward. This may be expreſſed by ſaying, the man was born ſo; or, the thing was generated ſuch.

Nature ſometimes means an internal principle of local motion, as we ſay, the ſtone falls, or the flame riſes by nature; for this we may ſay, that the motion up or down is ſpontaneous, or produced by its proper cauſe.

Nature ſometimes means the eſtabliſhed courſe of things corporeal; as, nature makes the night ſucceed the day. This may be termed eſtabliſhed order, or ſettled courſe.

Nature means ſometimes the aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, eſpecially a living one; as when phyſicians ſay, that nature is ſtrong, or nature left to herſelf will do the cure. For this may be uſed, conſtitution, temperament, or ſtructure of the body.

Nature is put likewiſe for the ſyſtem of the corporeal works of God; as there is no phœnix or chimera in nature. For nature thus applied, we may uſe the world, or the univerſe.

Nature is ſometimes indeed commonly taken for a kind of tendency. In this ſenſe it is beſt not to uſe it at all. Boyle's Free Enquiry.

NATU'RITY. n. ſ. [from nature.] The ſtate of being produced by nature. Not uſed.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the firſt cauſe which we impute not on the ſecond; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto naturity. Brown.

NA'VAL. adj. [naval, Fr. navalis, Lat.]

1. Conſiſting of ſhips.

Encamping on the main,
Our naval army had beſieged Spain;
They that the whole world's monarchy deſign'd,
Are to their ports by our bold fleet confin'd. Waller.

As our high veſſels paſs their wat'ry way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay. Prior.

2. Belonging to ſhips.

Maſters of ſuch numbers of ſtrong and valiant men, as well as of all the naval ſtores that furniſh the world. Temple.

NAVE. n. ſ. [naf, Saxon.]

1. The middle part of the wheel in which the axle moves.

Out, out, thou ſtrumpet fortune! all you gods
In general ſynod take away her pow'r;
Break all the ſpokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n,
As low as to the fiends. Shakſpeare.

In the wheels of waggons the hollows of the naves, by their ſwift rotations on the ends of the axle-trees, produce a heat ſometimes ſo intenſe as to ſet them on fire. Ray.

2. [from navis, nave, old French.] The middle part of the church distinct from the aisles or wings.

It comprehends the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel. Ayliffe's Parergon.

NA'VEL. n. s. [napela, navela, Saxon.]

1. The point in the middle of the belly, by which embryos communicate with the parent.

Imbrasides addrest
His javeline at him, and so ript his navill, that the wound,
As on the earth that his eyes, so open'd on the ground,
It pour'd his entrailes. Chapman.

As children, while within the womb they live,
Feed by the navel: here they feed not to. Davies.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments. Brown.

Me from the womb the midwife muse did take,
She cut my navel. Cowley.

There is a superintending Providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the secundines and parted from the navel string. Derham.

2. The middle; the interiour part.

Being prest to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. Shakspeare.

Within the navel of this hideous wood,
Immur'd in cypress shades, a sorcerer dwells. Milt.

NA'VELGALL. n. s.

Navelgall is a bruise on the top of the chine of the back, behind the saddle, right against the navel, occasioned either by the saddle being split behind, or the stuffing being wanting, or by the crupper buckle sitting down in that place, or some hard weight or knobs lying directly behind the saddle.

NA'VELWORT. n. s. [cotyledon.] A plant. It hath the appearance of houseleek. Miller.

NA'VEW. n. s. [napus, Lat. navet, naveau, French.] A plant.

It agrees in most respects with the turnep; but has a lesser root, and somewhat warmer in taste. In the isle of Ely the species, which is wild, is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil. Miller.

NAUGHT. adj. [nahꞇ, naphihꞇ, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.] Bad; corrupt; worthless: it is now hardly used but in ludicrous language.

With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught. Hooker.

Thy sister's naught: Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here.
Shakspeare.

NAUGHT. n. s. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly, written nought. See AUGHT and OUGHT.

Be you contented
To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench.
Shakspeare.

NA'UGHTILY. adv. [from naughty.] Wickedly; corruptly.

NA'UGHTINESS. n. s. [from naughty.] Wickedness; badness. Slight wickedness or perverseness, as of children.

No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own; and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I loth to do. Sidney.

NA'UGHTY. adj. The same with naught.

1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney.

These naughty times
Put bars between the owners and their rights.
Shakspeare.

How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shaksp.

2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.

If gentle slumbers on thy temples creep,
But naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,
Betake thee to thy bed. Dryden.

NAVI'CULAR. adj. [navicularis, Lat. naviculaire, Fr.] In anatomy, the third bone in each foot that lies between the astragalus and ossa cuneiformia. Dict.

NA'VIGABLE. adj. [navigable, Fr. navigabilis, Lat.] Capable of being passed by ships or boats.

The first-peopled cities were all founded upon these navigable rivers or their branches, by which the one might give succour to the other. Raleigh.

Many have motioned to the council of Spain, the cutting of a navigable channel through this small isthmus, so to shorten their common voyages to China, and the Moluccoes. Heylyn.

Almighty Jove surveys
Earth, air, and shores, and navigable seas. Dryden.

NA'VIGABLENESS. n. s. [from navigable.] Capacity to be passed in vessels.

To NA'VIGATE. v. n. [navigo, Lat. naviger, Fr.] To sail; to pass by water.

The Phœnicians navigated to the extremities of the western ocean. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To NA'VIGATE. v. a. To pass by ships or boats.

Drusus, the father of the emperor Claudius, was the first who navigated the northern ocean. Arbuth.

NAVIGA'TION. n. s. [navigation, Fr. from navigate.]

1. The act or practice of passing by water.

Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever. Bacon.

The loadstone is that great help to navigation. More.

Rude as their ships, was navigation then,
No useful compass or meridian known;
Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
And knew no north but when the polestar shone.
Dryden.

When Pliny names the Pœni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phœnicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Vessels of navigation.

Tho' you untie the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches, tho' the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare.

By the sounding of navigators, that sea is not three hundred and sixty foot deep. Brerewood.

The rules of navigators must often fail. Brown.

The contrivance may seem difficult, because the submarine navigators will want winds, tides, and the sight of the heavens. Wilkins.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only a globe in speculation, has since been surrounded by the boldness of many navigators. Temple.

NAU'LAGE. n. s. [naulum, Latin.] The freight of passengers in a ship.

NAU'MACHY. n. s. [naumachie, Fr. naumachia, Lat.] A mock seafight.

To NAU'SEATE. v. n. [from nausea, Lat.] To grow squeamish; to turn away with disgust.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it. Watts on the Mind.

To NAU'SEATE. v. a.

1. To loathe; to reject with disgust.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cry'd up in one age, which are decryed and nauseated in another. Brown.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauseates the praise, which in her youth she won,
And hates the muse by which she was undone.
Dryden.

The patient nauseates and loaths wholesome foods.
Blackmore.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the best,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.

He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were nauseated, then gave her a lash with his tail. Swift.

NAU'SEOUS. adj. [from nausea, Lat. nausée, Fr.] Loathsome; disgustful; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles wherein children take delight,
Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite.
And from those gaieties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, 'till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome. Ray.

Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.

NAU'SEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsomely; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nauseously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve. Dryden.

Their fatire's praise;
So nauseously and so unlike they paint. Garth.

NAU'SEOUSNESS. n. s. [from nauseous.] Loathsomeness; quality of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

NET. n. ſ. [nati, Gothick; net, Sax.]

1. A texture woven with large interſtices or meſhes, uſed commonly as a ſnare for animals.

Poor bird! thou'dſt never fear the net, nor lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin. Shakſpeare.

Impatience entangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all eaſe our trouble. Taylor.

2. Any thing made with interſtitial vacuities.

He made nets of chequered work for the chapiters, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings.

The vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thomſon.

NETHER. adj. [neoðeɲ, Saxon; neder, Dutch. It has the form of a comparative, but is never uſed in expreſſed, but only in implied compariſon; for we ſay the nether part, but never ſay this part is nether than that, nor is any poſitive in uſe, though it ſeems comprized in the word beneath. Nether is not now much in uſe.]

1. Lower; not upper.

No man ſhall take the nether or the upper milſtone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. Deuteronomy.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and nether great lip. Peacham.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Diſtorted, all my nether ſhape thus grew Transform'd. Milton.

The upper part whereof was whey,
The nether, orange mix'd with grey. Hudibras.

A beauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts. Roſc.

As if great Atlas from his height
Shou'd ſink beneath his heav'nly weight,
And with a mighty flaw, the flaming wall
Should gape immenſe, and ruſhing down o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The firſt ſublime in heaven, the laſt is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This ſhews you are above,
You juſtices, that theſe our nether crimes,
So ſpeedily can venge. Shakſpeare.

Numberleſs were thoſe bad angels, ſeen
Hov'ring on wing under the cope of hell,
'Twixt upper, nether, and ſurrounding fires. Milton.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No leſs deſire
To found this nether empire, which might riſe,
In emulation, oppoſite to heav'n. Milton.

The gods with hate beheld the nether ſky,
The ghoſts repine. Dryden.

NE'THERMOST. adj. [ſuperl. of nether.] Loweſt.

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou haſt delivered my ſoul from the nethermoſt hell. Pſalms.

Undaunted to meet there whatever pow'r,
Or ſpirit, of the nethermoſt abyſs
Might in that noiſe reſide. Milton.

All that can be ſaid of a liar lodged in the very nethermoſt hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worſe than hell for ſinners, hell itſelf would be too good for him. South.

Heraclitus tells us, that the eclipſe of the ſun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our ſight, appears uppermoſt, and the convex nethermoſt. Keil againſt Burnet.

NE'TWORK. n. ſ. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decuſſated, at equal diſtances, with interſtices between the interſections.

Nor any ſkill'd in workmanſhip emboſs'd;
Nor any ſkill'd in loops of ſing'ring fine,
Might in their diverſe cunning ever dare,
With this ſo curious network to compare. Spenſer.

A large cavity in the ſinciput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addiſon.

Whoever contemplates with becoming attention this curious and wonderful net-work of veins, muſt be tranſported with admiration. Blackmore.

NEVER. adv. [ne ever, næfre, Sax. ne æfre, not ever.]

1. At no time.

Never, alas, the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame. Cowley.

Never any thing was ſo unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

By its own force deſtroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

Death ſtill draws nearer, never ſeeming near. Pope.

2. It is uſed in a form of ſpeech handed down by the beſt writers, but lately accuſed, I think with juſtice, of ſoleciſm: as, he is miſtaken though never ſo wiſe. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expreſſed thus, he is miſtaken though ever ſo wiſe; that is, he is miſtaken how wiſe ſoever he be. The common mode can only be defended by ſupplying a very harſh and unprecedented ellipſis; he is miſtaken though ſo wiſe, as never was any: ſuch however is the common uſe of the word among the beſt authors.

Be it never ſo true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a ſmall thing perſuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

Aſk me never ſo much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye ſhall ſay. Geneſis.

In a living creature, though never ſo great, the ſenſe and the affections of any one part of the body inſtantly make a tranſcurſion throughout the whole body. Bacon.

They deſtroyed all, were it never ſo pleaſant, within a mile of the town. Knolles.

Death may be ſudden to him, though it comes by never ſo ſlow degrees. Duty of Man.

He that ſhuts his eyes againſt a ſmall light, would not be brought to ſee that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light; and never so near him. Atterbury.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whosoever has a friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective. Not any; but in reality it is not ever.

He answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled. Matthew.

5. It is much used in composition: as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature assureth us by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

But a smooth and stedfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combin'd,
Kindle never-dying fires. Carew.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude. Milt.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the arts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flow'rs,
Revive and raise themselves with mod'rate show'rs;
But over-charg'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist. Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd them never-fading bays.
Roscommon.

Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays Dryden.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryden.

Farewel, ye never-opening gates. Dryden.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet flores of cold so greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackm.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's self lay dead. Pope

What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy screw'd-up front, thy state grimace. Swift.

NEVERTHELE'SS. adv. [never the less.] Notwithstanding that.

They plead that even such ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished. Hooker.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart; nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irretragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

NEUTRA'LITY. n. f. [neutralité, Fr.]

1. A state of indifference, of neither friendship nor hostility.

Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of publick danger, desert the interest of their fellow-subjects. Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth.

All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the publick is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift

2. A state between good and evil.

There is no health: physicians say, that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality. Donne.

NEU'TRALLY. adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on either part.

NEW. adj. [newyd, Welsh; neop, Saxon; neuf, Fr.]

1. Not old; fresh; lately produced, made, or had; novel. New is used of things, and young of persons.

What's the newest grief!—
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shakspeare.

2. Not being before.

Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

3. Modern; of the present time.

Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple.

4. Different from the former.

Steadfastly purposing to lead a new life Com. P.

5. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.

Their names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days.
Pope

6. Not habituated; not familiar.

Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of hereticks, and such as privily will infuse their poison into new minds. Hooker.

New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryd.

9. Not of ancient extraction.

A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outshines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

NEW. adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for newly, which the following examples may explain.

As soon as she had written them, a new swarm of thoughts stinging her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney

God hath not then left this to chuse that, neither would reject that to chuse this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Spens.

Your master's lines
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakspeare.

Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her or leave her? Shakspeare.

Left by a multitude
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out.
Shakspeare.

Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I a gasping, new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd. Shaksp.

He saw heav'n blossom with a new born light,
On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd
The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright
The way to Bethl'em, and as boldly blaz'd;
Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night. Crashaw.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new born day;
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night,
When a ruddy storm, whose scoul
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night
To blot the newly blossom'd light. Crashaw

Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together sow'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts, that this new-comer shame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

Their father's state,
And new-entrusted sceptre. Milton.

The new-created world, which fame in heav'n
Long had foretold. Milton.

His evil
Thou usest, and from thence createst more good,
Witness this new-made world, another heav'n. Milt.

All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter hair,
All in that new-blown age which does inspire
Warmth in themselves, and in beholders fire. Cowl.

If it could, yet that it should always turn them into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashioned one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined Ray.

This English edition is not to properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new-moulded. Burnet.

New-found lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery. Burnet

Let this be nature's frailty, or her fate,
Or Ilgrim's counsel, her new-chosen mate. Dryden

Shewn all at once you dazzled to our eyes,
As new-born Pallas did the gods surprize;
When springing forth from Jove's new-closing wound,
She struck the warlike spear into the ground. Dryd

A bird new made, about the banks she plies,
Not far from shore, and short excursions tries. Dryd

Our house has sent to-day
T' infuse our new-built vessel call'd a play. Dryd

Then curds and cream,
And new-laid eggs, which Baucis' busy care
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden

When pleading Matho, born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashioned chair.
Dryden

A new-form'd faction does your power oppose,
The fight's confus'd, and all who met were foes.
Dryden.

If thou ken'ſt from far
Among the Pleiades a new-kindled ſtar;
If any ſparkles from the reſt more bright,
'Tis ſhe that ſhines in that propitious light. Dryden.

We reſtore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aquafortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle.

NITRE. n. ſ. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Lat.]

The ſalt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or ſalt-petre, is a cryſtalline, pellucid, but ſomewhat whatiſh ſubſtance, of an acid and bitterith taſte, impreſſing a peculiar ſenſe of coldneſs upon the tongue. This ſalt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid ſpirit capable of diſſolving almoſt every thing, yet manifeſts no ſign of its containing any acid at all in its crude ſtate. Nitre is of the number of thoſe ſalts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, ſtones, and other foſſil ſubſtances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is ſometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the ſurface of old walls; theſe efflorescences diſſolved in proper water, ſhooting into regular and proper cryſtals of nitre. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Perſia and the Eaſt-Indies, is a kind of yellowiſh marl found in the bare cliffs of the ſides of hills expoſed to the northern and eaſtern winds, and never in any other ſituation. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native and pure ſalt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native ſalts, being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of thoſe made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular cryſtallization, which thoſe ſalts are not. It is found on or very near the ſurface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, ſpungy, light, and friable, and when pure, of a pale brownith white colour. In Scripture we find that the ſalt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an abſterſive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this ſalt, but not with ſalt-petre, as do many different qualities aſcribed to it by the ancients. Hill on Foſſils.

Some tumultuous cloud,
Inſtinct with fire and nitre, hurried him. Milton.

Some ſteep their ſeed, and ſome in cauldrons boil,
With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil. Dryden.

NI'TROUS. adj. [nitreux, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; conſiſting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the ſun, gather nitrous fatneſs more than either of them have ſeverally. Bacon.

The northern air being more fully charged with thoſe particles ſuppoſed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fitteſt to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is ſufficient to move ſuch an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought ſo much inclin'd,
May ſnowy fields and nitrous paſtures find,
Meet ſtores of cold ſo greedily purſu'd,
And be refreſh'd with never-waſting food. Blackm.

NI'TRY. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

No'thing. n. ſ. [no and thing; nathing, Scottiſh.]

1. Negation of being; nonentity; univerſal negation: oppoſed to ſomething.

It is moſt certain, that there never could be nothing. For if there could have been an inſtant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made ſomething, or ſomething made itſelf, and ſo was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing, then there is, and was, a being of neceſſity, without any beginning. Grew.

We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we aſſert an eternal God to have been the efficient cauſe of it. Bentley.

This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philoſophical ſenſe; ſo we ſay there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar ſenſe, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot ſay there is nothing in the cup, in a ſtrict philoſophical ſenſe, while there is air in it. Watts.

2. Nonexiſtence.

Mighty ſtates characterleſs are grated
To duſty nothing. Shakſpeare.

3. Not any thing; no particular thing.

There ſhall nothing die. Exodus.

Yet had his aſpect nothing of ſevere,
But ſuch a face as promis'd him ſincere. Dryden.

Philoſophy wholly ſpeculative is barren, and produces nothing but vain ideas. Dryden.

Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone. Addiſon on the War.

4. No other thing.

Nothing but a ſteady reſolution brought to practice, God's grace uſed, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged, nothing but this will intitle you to God's acceptance. Wake.

Words are made to declare ſomething; where they are, by thoſe who pretend to inſtruct, otherwiſe uſed, they conceal indeed ſomething; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or ſophiſtry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing elſe under them. Locke.

5. No quantity or degree.

The report which the troops of horſe make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows. Clarendon.

6. No importance; no uſe; no value.

The outward ſhew of churches draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever ſome of our late too nice fools ſay, there is nothing in the ſeemly form of the church. Spenſ.

Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Iſaiah.

7. No poſſeſſion of fortune.

A moſt homely ſhepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unſpeakable eſtate. Shakſpeare.

8. No difficulty; no trouble.

We are induſtrious to preſerve our bodies from ſlavery, but we make nothing of ſuffering our ſouls to be ſlaves to our luſts. Ray.

9. A thing of no proportion.

The charge of making the ground, and otherwiſe, is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon.

10. Trifle; ſomething of no conſideration or importance.

I had rather have one ſcratch my head i' th' ſun,
When the alarum was ſtruck, than idly ſit
To hear my nothings monſter'd. Shakſpeare.

My dear nothings, take your leave
No longer muſt you me deceive. Craſhaw.

'Tis nothing, ſays the fool; but ſays the friend,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not ſee your dropſy belly ſwell? Dryden.

That period includes more than a hundred ſentences that might be writ to expreſs multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual buſineſs of having no buſineſs to do. Pope's Letters.

Narciſſus is the glory of his race;
For who does nothing with a better grace? Young.

11. Nothing has a kind of adverbial ſignification. In no degree; not at all.

The fiction of ſome beings which are not in nature, ſecond notions as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real ſeparate being. Dryden.

Many actions are puniſhed by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are ſuch acts; for if they were puniſhed properly under that notion, and upon that account, the puniſhment would equally reach all actions of the ſame kind. South.

What hath been generally agreed on, I content myſelf to aſſume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Newton.

There is nothing made a more common ſubject of diſcourſe than nature and its laws, and yet few agree in their notions about theſe words. Cheyne.

That notion of hunger, cold, ſound, colour, thought, wiſh, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, ſound, wiſh, &c. Watts.

2. Sentiment; opinion.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not moleſt us, unleſs we ourſelves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts and notions vain. Milton.

It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, ſhould one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themſelves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours. Addiſon.

Senſual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleaſure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come. Atterbury.

3. Senſe; underſtanding; intellectual power. This ſenſe is frequent in Shakſpeare, but not in uſe.

His notion weakens, his diſcernings
Are lethargy'd. Shakſpeare.

So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milton.

NO'TIONAL. adj. [from notion.]

1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; ſubſiſting only in idea; viſionary; fantaſtical.

The general and ſubordinate contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjugations, of the influences of heaven, are to be ſet aſide, being but notional and ill-limited, and definite axioms are to be drawn out of meaſured inſtances. Bacon.

Happineſs, object of that waking dream
Which we call life, miſtaking; fugitive theme
Of my purſuing verſe, ideal ſhade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.

We muſt be wary, leſt we aſcribe any real ſubſiſtence or perſonality to this nature or chance; for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abſtract univerſal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occaſioned by our reflecting upon the ſettled courſe of things; denoting only thus much, that all thoſe bodies move and act according to their eſſential properties, without any conſciouſneſs or intention of ſo doing. Bentley.

2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.

The moſt forward notional dictators ſit down in a contented ignorance. Glanville.

NOTIONA'LITY. n. ſ. [from notional.] Empty, ungrounded opinion. Not in uſe.

Waller.

3. At one time; at another time.

Now high, now low, now master up, now miss.
Pope.

4. It is sometimes a particle of connexion, like the French or, and Latin autem: as, if this be true, he is guilty; now this is true, therefore he is guilty.

Now whatsoever he did or suffered, the end thereof was to open the doors of the kingdom of heaven, which our iniquities had shut up. Hooker.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him. Now to affect the malice of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them. Shakspeare.

Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man but Barabbas, now Barabbas was a robber. John.

Natural reason persuades man to love his neighbour, because of similitude of kind; because mutual love is necessary for man's welfare and preservation, and every one desires another should love him. Now it is a maxim of Nature, that one do to others, according as he would himself be done to. White.

Pheasants which are granivorous birds, the young live mostly upon ants eggs. Now birds, being of a hot nature, are very voracious, therefore there had need be an infinite number of insects produced for their sustenance. Ray.

The other great and undoing mischief, which befals men, is by their being misrepresented. Now by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to others, in the way of slander and detraction. South.

Helim bethought himself, that the first day of the full moon of the month Tizpa, was near at hand. Now it is a received tradition among the Persians, that the souls of the royal family, who are in a state of bliss, do, on the first full moon after their decease, pass through the eastern gate of the black palace. Addison.

The praiſe of doing well
Is to the ear, as ointment to the ſmell.
Now if ſome flies, perchance, however ſmall,
Into the alabaſter urn ſhould fall,
The odours die. Prior.

The only motives that can be imagined of obedience to laws, are either the value and certainty of rewards, or an apprehenſion of juſtice and ſeverity Now neither of theſe, excluſive of the other, is the true principle of our obedience to God. Rogers.

A human body a forming in ſuch a fluid in any imaginable poſture, will never be reconcilable to this hydroſtatical law. There will be always ſomething lighter beneath, and ſomething heavier above. Now what can make the heavier particles of bone to ſtand above the lighter cakes of fleſh, or depreſs theſe below thoſe, againſt the tendency of nature. Bentley.

5. After this; ſince things are ſo: in familiar ſpeech.

See where he lies, inherſed in the arms
Of the moſt bloody nurſer of his harms. Shakſpeare.

2. A promoter; a fomenter.

NU'RSERY. n. ſ. [from nurſe.]

1. The act or office of nurſing.

I lov'd her moſt, and thought to ſet my reſt
On her kind nurſery. Shakſpeare.

2. That which is the object of a nurſe's care.

She went forth among her fruits and flow'rs,
To viſit how they proſper'd, bud and bloom
Her nurſery: they at her coming ſprung,
And touch'd by her fair tendance gladlier grew. Milton.

3. A plantation of young trees to be tranſplanted to other ground.

Your nurſery of ſtocks ought to be in a more barren ground than the ground is whereunto you remove them. Bacon.

My paper is a kind of nurſery for authors; and ſome who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flouriſh under their own names. Addiſon.

4. Place where young children are nurſed and brought up.

I' th' ſwathing cloaths, the other from their nurſery
Were ſtol'n. Shakſpeare.

You ſee before you the ſpectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nurſery to the ſanctuary, from the ſanctuary to the direful priſon, from the priſon to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderneſs; for ſo the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the ſhape in which he plies
At nurſe's elbow when ſhe lies
Or ſtands before the nurſery doors,
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have publick nurſeries, where all parents are obliged to ſend their infants to be educated. Swift.

5. The place or ſtate where any thing is foſtered or brought up, from a nurſery of children; or whence any thing is to be removed, from a nurſery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itſelf a very idle life, and a fit nurſery for a thief. Spenſer.

To ſee fair Padua, nurſery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakſpeare.

A luxurious court is the nurſery of diſeaſes; it breeds them, it encourages, nourriſhes, and entertains them. L'Eſtrange.

A nurſery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryd.

NU'RSLING. n. ſ. [from nurſe.] One nurſed up; a fondling.

Then was the held in ſovereign dignity,
And made the nurſling of nobility. Spenſer.

I was his nurſling once, and choice delight,
His deſtin'd from the womb. Milton.

In their tender nonage, while they ſpread
Their ſpringing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nurſling ſpare. Dryden.

NU'RTURE. n. ſ. [contracted from nourriture, French.]

1. Food; diet.

For this did th' angel twice deſcend?
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and ſacred. Milton.

2. Education; inſtitution. Little uſed.

She ſhould take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not ſuffer them to come into bad hands. Spenſer.

The thorny point
Of bare diſtreſs, hath ta'en from me the ſhew
Of ſmooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know ſome nurture. Shakſpeare.

To NU'RTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up.

Thou broughteſt it up with thy righteouſneſs, and nurtureſt it in thy law, and reformeſt it with thy judgment. 2 Eſdras.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his firſt rudiments, till the years of ten. Wotton.

When an inſolent deſpiſer of diſcipline, nurtured into impudence, ſhall appear before a church governour, ſeverity and reſolution are that governour's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.

They ſuppoſe mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offſpring with a conſcious tenderneſs. Bentley.

To NU'STLE. v. a. To fondle; to cheriſh. Corrupted from nurſle. See NUZZLE. Ainſworth.

NUT. n. ſ. [hnut, Sax. noot, Dutch; noix, French.]

1. The fruit of certain trees: it conſiſts of a kernel covered by a hard ſhell. If the ſhell and kernel are in the centre of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a ſtone.

One chanc'd to find a nut,
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel root,
There ſcatter'd by a ſquirrel,
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Pay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er ſo mad,
I'll ſet you ſafe from peril. Drayton.

Nuts are hard of digeſtion, yet poſſeſs ſome good medicinal qualities. Arbuthnot.

2. A ſmall body with teeth, which correſpond with the teeth of wheels.

This faculty may be more conveniently uſed by the multiplication of ſeveral wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are uſed for the roaſting of meat. Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the ſcrews and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never ſo ſmooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.

NU'TBROWN. adj. [nut and brown.] Brown like a nut kept long.

Young and old come forth to play,
Till the live-long daylight fail,
Then to the ſpicy nuthrown ale. Milton.
When this nutbrown ſword was out,
With ſtomach huge he laid about. Hudibras.
Two milk-white kids run friſking by her ſide,
For which the nutbrown laſs, Erithacis,
Full often offer'd many a ſavoury kiſs. Dryden.
King Hardicnute, 'midſt Danes and Saxons ſtout,
Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on grout. King.

NU'TCRACKERS. n. ſ. [nut and crack.] An inſtrument uſed to encloſe nuts and break them by preſſure.

He caſt every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addiſon.

NU'TGALL. n. ſ. [nut and gall.] Hard excreſcence of an oak.

In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of conſtant ſhapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandiſh oak. Brown.

NU'THATCH. NU'TJOBBER. NU'TPECKER. n. ſ. [picus martius.] A bird. Ainſworth.

NU'THOOK. n. ſ. [nut and hook.]

1. A ſtick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.
2. It was anciently, I know not why, a name of contempt.

Nuthook, nuthook, you lie. Shakſpeare.

NU'TMEG. n. ſ. [nut and muguèt, Fr.] The kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and ſeparated from that and from its inveſtient coat, the mace, before it is ſent over to us; except that the whole fruit is ſometimes ſent over in preſerve, by way of ſweetmeat, or as a curioſity. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has leſs of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the ſhape of an olive. Hill.

The ſecond integument, a dry and floſculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the ſhell, which lieth under the mace, is the ſame we call nutmeg. Brown.

I to my pleaſant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant ſcent. Sandys.

NU'TSHELL. n. ſ. [nut and ſhell.]

1. The hard ſubſtance that encloſes the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutſhell, and count myſelf a king of infinite ſpace. Shakſpeare.

It ſeems as eaſy to me, to have the idea of ſpace empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutſhell without a kernel. Locke.

2. It is uſed proverbially for any thing of little value.

A fox had me by the back, and a thouſand pound to a nutſhell I had never got off again. L'Eſtrange.

NU'TTREE. n. ſ. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts: commonly a hazel.

Of trees you ſhall have the nuttree and the oak. Peacham.

Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryd.

NUTRICA'TION. n. ſ. [nutricatio, Latin.] Manner of feeding or being fed.

Beſides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a ſecond argument to overthrow this airy nutrication. Brown.

NUTRIMENT. n. ſ. [nutrimentum, Lat.] That which feeds or nouriſhes; food; aliment.

This ſlave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why ſhould it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shak.

The ſtomach returns what it has received, in ſtrength and nutriment, diffuſed into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift.

NUTRIME'NTAL. adj. [from nutriment.] Having the qualities of food; alimental.

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digeſtion as an emulſion. Arbuthnot.

NUTRI'TION. n. ſ. [from nutritio, nutrio, Lat. nutrition, Fr.]

1. The act or quality of nouriſhing, ſupporting ſtrength, or increaſing growth.

New parts are added to our ſubſtance to ſupply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is ſo prepared for nutrition, or by what mechaniſm it is ſo regularly diſtributed. Glanville.

The obſtruction of the glands of the meſentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in the glands is a neceſſary conſtituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbuthnot.

2. That which nouriſhes; nutriment. Leſs properly.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar ſpot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NUTRI'TIOUS. adj. [from nutrio, Latin.] Having the quality of nouriſhing.

O may'ſt thou often ſtain
Thy furrows white-n'd by the woolly rain
Nutritious! ſecret nitre lurks within. Phillips.

The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itſelf reſembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbuthnot.

NU'TRITIVE. adj. [from nutrio, Latin.] Nouriſhing; nutrimental; alimental.

While the ſecretory, or ſeparating glands, are ſo much widened and extended, they ſuffer a great quantity of nutritive juice to paſs through. Blackm.

NU'TRITURE. n. ſ. [from nutrio, Latin.] The power of nouriſhing. Not uſed.

Never make a meal of fleſh alone, have ſome other meat with it of leſs nutriture. Harvey.

To NU'ZZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original ſignification, ſeems corrupted from nurſle; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers ſuppoſed it to come from nozzle or noſe, and in that ſenſe uſed it.]

1. To nurſe; to foſter.

Old men long nuzzled in corruption, ſcorning them that would ſeek reformation. Sidney.

2. To go with the noſe down like a hog.

He charged through an army of lawyers, ſometimes with ſword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbuthnot.

Sir Roger ſhook his ears, and nuzzled along, well ſatisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arbuth.

The bleſſed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles cloſe behind. Pope.

NYMPH. n. ſ. [νύμφη; nympha, Lat.]

1. A goddeſs of the woods, meadows, or waters.

And as the moiſture which the thirſty earth
Sucks from the ſea, to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at laſt doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the graſſy plains. Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This reſolve no mortal dame,
None but thoſe eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.

NY'MPHISH. adj. [from nymph.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.

Tending all to nymphiſh war. Drayton.

NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obſolete.

Thou findeſt fault, where nys to be found,
And buildeſt ſtrong work upon a weak ground. Spenſer.

O.

O Has in Engliſh a long ſound; as, drone, groan, ſtone, alone, cloke, broke, coal, drall; or ſhort, got, not, ſhot, prong, long. It is uſually denoted long by a ſervile a ſubjoined; as, moan; or by e at the end of the ſyllable; as, bone: when theſe vowels are not appended, it is generally ſhort, except before ll; as, droll, ſcroll, and even then ſometimes ſhort; as, loll.

1. O is uſed as an interjection of wiſhing or exclamation.

O that we, who have reſiſted all the deſigns of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger! Decay of Piety.

O! were he preſent, that his eyes and hands
Might ſee, and urge, the death which he commands. Dryden.

2. O is uſed with no great elegance by Shakſpeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold
The vaſty field of France! or may we cram
Within this wooden O, the very caſks
That did affright the air at Agincourt. Shakſpeare.

OAF. n. ſ. [This word is variouſly written; auff, oſe, and oph; it ſeems a corruption of ouphe, a demon or fairy; in German alf, from which elf: and means properly the ſame with changeling; a fooliſh child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they ſteal away.]

1. A changeling; a fooliſh child left by the fairies.

Theſe, when a child haps to be got,
Which after proves an idiot,
When fooſt perceives it thriveth not,

The fault therein to fmother: a
Some silly doating bramleſs calf,
That underſtands things by the half,
Says that the fairy left this oaf,
And took away the other. Drayton.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.

OA'FISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltiſh.

OA'FISHNESS. n. ſ. [from oafiſh.] Stupidity; dulneſs.

OAK, n. ſ. [ac, æc, Sax. which, ſays Skinner, to ſhow how eaſy it is to play the fool, under a ſhow of literature and deep reſearches, I will, for the diverſion of my reader, derive from δικος, a houſe; the oak being the beſt timber for building. Skinner ſeems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has ſhown his uſual fondneſs for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, ſays the grave critick, ſignified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but ſtrength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci poteſt, from ἀλκη, ſtrength; by taking the three firſt letters, and then ſinking the λ, as is not uncommon; quercus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which conſiſt of a great number of ſmall tender threads. The embryos, which are produced at remote diſtances from theſe on the ſame tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard ſcaly cups: the leaves are ſinuated. The ſpecies are five. Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shakſpeare.

He lay along
Under an oak, whoſe antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakſpeare.

No tree beareth ſo many ballard fruits as the oak: for beſides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, ſticking cloſe to the body of the tree without ſtalk. Bacon.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots riſing up, and ſpreads by ſlow degrees:
Three centuries he grows, and three he ſtays
Supreme in ſtate; and in three more decays. Dryden.

An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is ſtill the ſame oak. Locke.

A light earthy, ſtony, and ſparry matter, incruſted and affixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Foſſils.

Let India boaſt her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber and the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which thoſe trees adorn. Pope

OAK Evergreen. n. ſ. [ilex.]

The fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many ſorts of tools and utenſils; and affords the moſt durable charcoal in the world. Miller.

OAKA'PPLE. n. ſ. [oak and apple.] A kind of ſpongy excreſcence on the oak.

Another kind of excreſcence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in bakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon.

OA'KEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak.

No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ſhips. Bacon.

By lot from Jove I hunt the pow'r
Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.
Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaken garland to be worn on feſtivals, was the recompenſe of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Addiſon.

He ſnatch'd a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandiſh it. Arbuthnot.

OA'KENPIN. n. ſ. An apple.

Oakenpin, ſo called from its hardneſs, is a laſting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Weſtbury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.

OA'KUM. n. ſ. [A word probably formed by ſome corruption.] Cords untwiſted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are ſtopped.

They make their oakum, whereunto they caulk the ſeams of the ſhips, of old ſear and weather-beaten ropes, when they are over ſpent and grown ſo rotten as they ſerve for no other uſe but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and waſtes away with every ſea as the ſhips labour and are toſſed. Raleigh.

Some drive old oakum thro' each ſeam and rift;
Then left hand does the caulking-iron guide;
The ratling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR. n. ſ. [ape, Sax. perhaps by alluſion to the common expreſſion of plowing the water, from the ſame root with ear, to plow; aro, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which veſſels are driven in the water, the reſiſtance made by water to the oar puſhing on the veſſel.

Th' oars were ſilver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept ſtroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faſter,
As amorous of their ſtrokes. Shakſpeare.

So tow'rds a ſhip the oar-finn'd gallies ply,
Which wanting ſea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to hail reveng'd. Denham.

In ſhipping ſuch as this, the Iriſh kern
And untaught Indian, on the ſtream did glide,
E'er ſharp-keel'd boats to ſkem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did ſpread from either ſide. Dryden.

Its progreſſive motion may be effected by the help of ſeveral oars, which in the outward ends of them ſhall be like the fins of a fiſh to contract and dilate. Wilkins.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.

He more undaunted on the rum rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing.

His bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himſelf with his good arms in luſty ſtrokes
To th' ſhore. Shakſpeare.

OA'RY. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or uſe of oars.

The ſwan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows
Her ſtate with oary feet. Milton.

His hair tranſforms to down, his fingers meet,
In ſkinny fins, and ſhape his oary feet. Addiſon.

OAST. n. ſ. A kiln. Not in uſe.

Empty the bunn into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oaſt or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OATCA'KE. n. ſ. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue ſtone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the croſs bars of iron, Peacham.

OA'TEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.

When ſhepherds pipe on oaten ſtraws,
And merry larks are ploughmens clocks. Shakſp

OATH. n. ſ. [aith, Gothick; aδ, Saxon. The diſtance between the noun oath, and the verb ſwear, is very obſervable, as it may ſhow that our oldeſt dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promiſe, corroborated by the atteſtation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy firſt beſt love,
For whoſe dear ſake thou then didſt read thy faith
Into a thouſand oaths; and all thoſe oaths
Deſcended into perjury to love me. Shakſpeare.

All the oath-rites ſaid,
I then aſcended her adorned bed. Chapman.

We have conſultations, which inventions ſhall be publiſhed, which not: and take an oath of ſecrecy for the concealing of thoſe which we think fit to keep ſecret. Bacon.

Thoſe called to any office of truſt, are bound by an oath to the faithful diſcharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon thoſe who believe that he is. Swift.

OA'THABLE. adj. [from oath. A word not uſed.] Capable of having an oath adminiſtered.

You're not oathable,
Altho' I know you'll ſwear
Into ſtrong ſhudders th' immortal gods. Shakſpeare.

OATHBRE'AKING. n. ſ. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.

His oathbreaking he mended thus,
By now forſwearing that he is forſworn. Shakſp.

OA'TMALT. n. ſ. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats.

In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barleymalt. Mortimer.

OA'TMEAL. n. ſ. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats.

Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the ſcab on the head. Arbuthnot.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of aſhes, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Gay.

OA'TMEAL. n. ſ. [panicum.] An herb. Ainſworth.

OATS. n. ſ. [aten, Sax.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horſes, but in Scotland ſupports the people.

It is of the graſs leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are diſpoſed in a looſe panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horſes. Shakſpeare.

It is bare mechaniſm, no otherwiſe produced than the turning of a wild oatbeard by the inſinuation of the particles of moiſture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley ſtraw firſt, and the oat ſtraw laſt. Mortimer.

His horſe's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OA'TTHISTLE. n. ſ. [oat and thiſtle.] An herb. Ainſworth.

OBAMBULA'TION. n. ſ. [obambulatio, from obambulo, Lat.] The act of walking about. Dict.

To OBDU'CE. v. a. [obduco, Lat.] To draw over as a covering.

No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its ſkin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.

OBDUC'TION. n. ſ. [from obductio, obduco, Lat.] The act of covering, or laying a cover.

OBDU'RACY. n. ſ. [from obdurate.] Inflexible wickedneſs; impenitence; hardneſs of heart.

Thou think'ſt me as far in the devil's book, as thou and Falſtaff, for obduracy and perſiſtency. Shakſpeare.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the abſolute completion of ſin in final obduracy. South.

OBDU'RATE. adj. [obduratus, Latin.]

1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obſtinate in ill; hardened; impenitent.

Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's ſake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have ſlain thee;
Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakſpeare.

If when you make your pray'rs,
God ſhould be ſo obdurate as yourſelves,
How would it fare with your departed ſouls? Shakſpeare.

Women are ſoft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou ſtern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorſeleſs. Shakſpeare.

To convince the proud what ſigns avail,

Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim.
Milton.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at leaft
My dying prayers, and grant my laft requeft.
Dryden.

2. Hardened; firm; ſtubborn: always with ſome degree of evil.

Sometimes the very cuſtom of evil makes the heart obdurate againſt whatſoever inſtructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleaſing ſorcery could charm
Pain for a while, or anguiſh, and excite
Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdurate breaſt
With ſtubborn patience, as with triple ſteel.
Milton.

No ſuch thought ever ſtrikes his marble obdurate heart, but it preſently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impoſſible for a man to be thorough paced in ingratitude, till he has ſhook off all fetters of pity and compaſſion. South.

3. Harſh; rugged.

They joined the moſt obdurate conſonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

OBDU'RATELY. adv. [from obdurate] Stubbornly; inflexibly; impenitently.

OBDU'RATENESS. n. ſ. [from obdurate.] Stubbornneſs; inflexibility; impenitence.

OBDURA'TION. n. ſ. [from obdurate.] Hardneſs of heart; ſtubbornneſs.

What occaſion it had given them to think, to their greater obduration in evil, that through a froward and wanton deſire of innovation, we did conſtrainedly thoſe things, for which conference was pretended? Hooker.

This barren ſeaſon is always the reward of obſtinate obduration. Hammond.

OBDU'RED. adj. [obduratus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impenitent.

This ſaw his hapleſs foes, but ſtood obdur'd,
And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'rs
Inſenſate. Milton.

OBE'DIENCE. n. ſ. [obedience, Fr. obedientia, Lat.] Obſequiouſneſs; ſubmiſſion to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed againſt him, it would ſhake in pieces the heart of his obedience. Shalſ.

Thy huſband
Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience. Shakſp.

His ſervants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of ſin unto death, or of obedience unto righteouſneſs. Romans.

It was both a ſtrange commiſſion, and a ſtrange obedience to a commiſſion, for men to furiouſly aſſailed, to hold their hands. Bacon.

In vain thou bid'ſt me to forbear,
Obedience were rebellion here. Cowley.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou did'ſt want,
Obedience to the law of God, impoſ'd
On penalty of death. Milton.

We muſt beg the grace and aſſiſtance of God's ſpirit to enable us to forſake our ſins, and to walk in obedience to him. Duty of Man.

The obedience of men is to imitate the obedience of angels, and rational beings on earth, are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him. Law.

OBE'DIENT. adj. [obediens, Latin.] Submiſſive to authority; complaint with command or prohibition; obſequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Corinthians.

To this her mother's plot

Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shakspeare.

There was no means for him as a christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon.

Nothing can be more reasonable than that such creatures should be under the obligation of accepting such evidence, as in itself is sufficient for their conviction. Wilkins.

The better to satisfy this obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryden.

No ties can bind, that from constraint arise,
Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies. Granville.

2. An act which binds any man to some performance.

The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen. Taylor.

3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.

Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself?
L'Estrange.

So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South.

OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatoire, Fr. from obligate.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive; with to or on.

And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes and states. Bacon.

As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Taylor.

A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.

If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void. Swift.

To OBLI'GE. v. a. [obliger, Fr. obligo, Lat.]

1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.

All these have moved me, and some of them obliged me to commend these my labours to your grace's patronage. White.

The church hath been thought fit to be called catholick, in reference to the universal obedience which it prescribeth; being regarded to the persons, obliging men of all conditions, and in relation to the precepts, requiring the performance of all the evangelical commands. Pearson.

Religion obliges men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.

The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers.

2. To indebt; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, must
Oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Waller.

Since love obliges not, I from this hour
Assume the right of man's despotic power. Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.
Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar,
And would not be obliged to God for more. Dryden.

When interest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the scaffold or the cell. Pope.

To those hills we are obliged for all our metals, and to them for all the conveniencies and comforts of life. Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferiour, than by disdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South.

Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.

Happy the people who preserve their honour,
By the same duties that oblige their prince!
Addison.

OBLIGE'E. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal and written contract.

OBLI'GEMENT. n. f. [obligement, French.] Obligation.

2. Deviation from moral rectitude.

There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity. Hooker

Count Rhodophill, cut out from government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scale of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities. Howel

For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity. South.

To OBLI'TERATE. v. a. [oblitero, ob and litera, Latin.]

1. To efface any thing written.

2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.

Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments. Ralegh.

Let men consider themselves as in that unhappy contract, which has rendered them part of the devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Piety

Those simple ideas the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirrour can refuse, alter, or oblit.rate the images which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERA'TION. n. s. [obliteratio, Latin.] Effacement; extinction.

Consider my the casualties of wars, transmigrations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent to some time have yielded.

OBLI'VION. n. s. [oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare.

Thou wouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shakspeare.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion. South.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnesty; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Davies.

OBSCURE. adj. [obscur, Fr. obscurus, Lat.]
1. Dark; unenlightened; gloomy; hindering light.
Whoso curseth his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness. Proverbs.
Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And thro' the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way? Milton.
2. Living in the dark.
The obscure bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shakspeare.
3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.
I explain some of the most obscure passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryden.
4. Not noted; not observable.
He says, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

To OBSCU'RE. v. a. [obscuro, Latin.]
1. To darken; to make dark.
They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured light; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakspeare.
Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds whistle, and the surges roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscure the pole. Pope.
2. To make less visible.
What must I hold a candle to my shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakspeare.
Thinking by this retirement to obscure himself from God, he infringed the omnisciency and essential ubiquity of his Maker. Brown.
3. To make less intelligible.
By private consent it hath been used in dangerous times to obscure writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Holder.
There is scarce any duty which has been so obscured by the writings of learned men, as this. Wake.
4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.
Think'st thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,
And feel'st not sin obscures thy godlike frame?
I know thee now by thy ungrateful pride,
That shows me what thy faded looks did hide. Dryden.
5. To conceal; to make unknown.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To sun or starlight, spread their umbrage broad. Milton.

OBSCU'RELY. adv. [from obscure.]
1. Not brightly; not luminously; darkly.
2. Out of sight; privately; without notice; not conspicuously.

It would not form one thought dark as mine are:
I could lend them obscureness now, and say,
Out of myself there should be no more day. Donne.
2. Unnoticed state; privacy.
You are not for obscurity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryden.
3. Darkness of meaning.
Not to mention that obscureness that attends prophetick raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle on Colours.
That this part of sacred Scripture had difficulties in it, many causes of obscurity did readily occur to me. Locke.
What lies beyond our positive ideas towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity. Locke.

OBSECRA'TION. n. f. [obsecratio, from obsecro, Lat.] Entreaty; supplication.
That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obsecration. Stillingfleet.

O'BSEQUIES. n. f. [obsequies, Fr. I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequiæ, Lat. this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.]
1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.
There was Dorilaus valiantly requiting his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.
Fair Juliet, that with angels doth remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living honour'd thee, and being dead,
With fun'ral obsequies adorn thy tomb. Shakspeare.
I spare the widows tears, their woeful cries,
And howling at their husbands obsequies;
How Theseus at these fun'rals did assist,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismist Dryden.
His body shall be royally interr'd,
I will, myself,
Be the chief mourner at his obsequies. Dryden.
Alas! poor Poll, my Indian talker, dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies. Creech.
2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.
Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy. Crashaw.
Him I'll solemnly attend,
With silent obsequy and funeral train,
Home to his father's house. Milton.

OBSE'QUIOUS. adj. [from obsequium, Latin.]
1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.
Adore not for the rising sun, that you forget the father, who ruled you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him. Bacon.
At his command the uprooted hills retir'd
Each to his place; they heard his voice, and went Obsequious. Milton's Paradise Lost.
I follow'd her; for what was honour knew,
And, with obsequious majesty, approv'd
My pleaded reason. Milton's Paradise Lost.
See how the obsequious wind and liquid air
The Theban swan does upward bear. Cowley.
